The law requires as laid down in S. 105 that the onus of proving circumstances which give the benefit of the general exception to an accused person lies on him, and in the absence of evidence the presumption is against the accused. But this does not mean that the accused must lead evidence. If it is apparent from the evidence on the record, whether produced by the prosecution or by the defence, that the general exception would apply, then the presumption is removed and it is open to the Court to consider whether the evidence proves to the satisfaction of the Court that the accused comes within the exception. The ordinary meaning of the word 'Malik' in reference to property is 'absolute owner' and if the testator used the word it is to be presumed that he uses it in its ordinary meaning. There is nothing unnatural in a Hindu sonless and not in a good state of health, writing a document by which directions are given to a widow to adopt the testator's nephew. It is certainly extremely improbable that a person wishing to put forward a forged will would run the risk of imitating the handwriting of the deceased or get it imitated by some one else when it would be so easy to attack a forged document when it runs over a folio page and purports to have been written by the testator. The plaintiff has to prove the document on which he relies but when once he has gone as far as putting before the Court a prima facie case which bears the signs of being genuine, then it is for the defendant to produce reliable grounds for upsetting the plaintiff's case and satisfy the Court that it is not only improbable but impossible. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 114—Human conduct.

—S. 114—Guiding principles.

———Presumption of some lawful origin explained.

The presumption of an origin in some lawful title which the Court has so often readily made in order to support possessory rights, long and quietly enjoyed, where no actual proof of title is forthcoming is one which is not a mere branch of the law of evidence. It is resorted to because of the failure of actual evidence. The matter is one of presumption based upon the policy of law but even considered as an inference from proved facts the grant presumed is the thing which may be regarded as likely to have happened. At the same time it is not a presumption to be capriciously made nor it is one which a certain class of possessor is entitled to, de jure. In a case such as this where it is necessary to indicate what particular kind of lawful title is being presumed the Court must be satisfied that such a title was in its nature practicable and reasonably capable of being presumed without doing violence to the probabilities of the case. It is the completion of a right to which circumstances clearly point where time has obliterated any record of the original commencement. The longer the period within which and the remoter the time when first a grant might be reasonably supposed to have occurred the less force there is in an objection that the grant could not have been lawful: A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 322, Affirmed; A. Deliberate default in the payment of revenue with the intention that property may be sold free of encumbrances is a common device to defraud mortgagees, and it is obviously essential to the success of that device that the purchaser should be a mere benamidar for the defaulter, since no man is likely to allow his property to be sold for an inadequate price except to himself or to some person representing him. A presumption of marriage may arise from long co-habitation, but if it is known that the connexion started in mere concubinage this presumption cannot arise. Per *Staples, A. J. The real test of the evidence of the approver is whether it has been believed or not and when it has been corroborated on many points and has not been shown to be false in any particular it should be accepted; and when once it has been accepted as a whole, corroboration as regards the identity of each of several accused should not be demanded. ———Corroborative evidence itself need not be sufficient to base conviction on—Independent evidence showing in material points that the story of the accomplice is true, is sufficient corroboration.

The nature of the corroboration will necessarily vary according to the particular circumstances of the offence charged and it would be in a high degree dangerous to attempt to formulate the kind of evidence which would be regarded as corroboration, except to say that corroborative evidence is evidence which shows or tends to show that the story of the accomplice, that the accused committed the crime, is true not merely that the crime has been committed, but that it was committed by the accused. The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime; it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connexion with the crime.

Corroborative evidence need not be sufficient in itself to base a conviction on. Confirmation of the story of an accomplice does not mean that there should be independent evidence of the accomplice's account of the crime itself. What the law clearly requires is that some relevant and material part of the approver's story incriminating the accused should have support from an independent source. ———Nature and extent of corroboration required discussed—English and Indian Law on the point do not differ.

Confirmation (corroboration) does not mean that there should be independent evidence of that which the accomplice relates, otherwise his testimony would be unnecessary. But one accomplice's evidence is not corroboration of the testimony of another accomplice. (1848) 3 Cox C. C. 526 and 531.

Evidence in corroboration must be evidence which implicates the accused, i.e., which confirms in some material particular not only the evidence that the crime has been committed but also that the prisoner committed it.

The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime; it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime. Were the law otherwise, many crimes which are usually committed between accomplices in secret, such as incest,

Therefore in spite of all that has been said to the contrary in law, the evidence of an accomplice stands on the same footing as any other evidence. The Court is not obliged to hold that he is unworthy of credit and must be corroborated. It is for the Court to consider after taking into consideration all the circumstances one of which being that he is an accomplice whether it does or does not rely on the evidence. Under S. 114 a Court may presume that the official acts have been regularly performed and "Regularly performed" means performed with due regard to the form and procedure.

Where plaintiff produces certain records of batwara proceedings and says defendants made certain admissions therein and defendants deny that they made any admissions, the identity of parties who made those admissions must, in the first instance, be established by the plaintiff to the satisfaction of the Court before the plaintiff can rely upon those admissions as against the defendants. But acquiescence cannot rehabilitate or render valid a transaction which is ultra vires and illegal. Further, estoppel by acquiescence connotes, among other things, that the person estopped in effect has represented to the person who is infringing his right that he is not entitled to complain that his right is being invaded, and that the party relying upon this representation has altered his position to his detriment under a mistaken impression that he was legally justified in acting as he had done. own right which is inconsistent with the right claimed by the other; and (4) he must know of that other's mistaken belief of his rights and he must have encouraged that other in his expenditure of money or in the other acts done by him. The mere fact the plaintiff raised no objection when the building was constructed by the defendant and that there was long delay on her part in enforcing her rights, if any, in respect of the land in dispute, is not sufficient to establish acquiescence when the defendant has never alleged that he had acted in the bona fide belief that he was acting within his rights: A. ———Acquiescence to act as estoppel must be fraudulent—Elements rendering an acquiescence fraudulent indicated.

The acquiescence which will deprive a man of his legal rights must amount to fraud. A man is not to be deprived of his legal rights unless he has acted in such a way as would make it fraudulent for him to set up those rights. The following are the elements or requisites necessary to constitute fraud of that description. In the first place the plaintiff must have made a mistake as to his legal rights. Secondly, the plaintiff must have expended some money or must have done some act (not necessarily upon the defendant's land) on the faith of his mistaken belief. Thirdly, the defendant, the possessor of the legal right, must know of the existence of his own right which is inconsistent with the right claimed by the plaintiff. If he does not know of it he is in the same position as the plaintiff, as, the doctrine of acquiescence is founded upon conduct with a knowledge of one's legal rights. Fourthly, the defendant, the possessor of the legal rights, must know of the plaintiff's mistaken belief of his rights. If he does not, there is nothing which calls upon him to assert his own rights. Lastly, the defendant, the possessor of the legal right, must have encouraged the plaintiff in his expenditure of money or in the other acts which he has done, either directly or by abstaining from asserting his legal right. Where all these elements exist there is fraud of such a nature as will entitle the Court to restrain the possessor of the legal right from exercising it, but nothing short of this will do: (1880) 15 Ch. D. 96, Foll. (Mears, C.J. and Lindsay, J.). JAI NARAIN v. JAFAR BEG. 92 I.C. 1017=48 All. 353= 24 A.L.J. 355=A.I.R. 1926 All. 324.

———Distinction between acquiescence when the act is in progress and acquiescence after the act is done, indicated.

Acquiescence by the landlord is a question of legal inference drawn from the facts found.

There is a distinction between a case where the acquiescence allowed occurs while the act acquiesced in, is in progress, and another, where the acquiescence takes place after the act has been completed. In the former case, the acquiescence is aquiescence under such circumstances that assent may be reasonably inferred from it. In the latter case, when the act is completed without any knowledge or without any assent on the part of the person whose right is infringed, the matter must be determined on very different legal considerations. A right of action has been vested in him, and mere delay to take legal proceeding to redress the injury cannot, by itself, constitute a bar to such proceedings, unless the delay on his part, after he has acquired full knowledge has affected or altered the position of his opponent. 19 C. If a raiyat without the permission of the zamindar begins to build upon waste land over which he has no right to build and completes his construction within a few months, the zamindar is not estopped from recovering possession of the site on the ground that he did not intervene at an earlier stage. Unless it could be established that the defendants were making constructions under some bona fide mistake of which the plaintiffs were aware and in spite of their knowledge the plaintiffs deliberately refrained from intervening and thereby led the defendants to believe that they were right in their estimation, there could be no estoppel. No one can by merely trespassing upon the land of another and constructing costly building on it claim a right to retain possession or to compel the owner to receive compensation for the land. 21 All. 496 (P.C.) and 12 A. ———Landlord and tenant.

In 1913 the landlord contracted to grant a permanent lease in respect of certain land. No formal lease was executed under the terms of S. 107, T. P. Act. Pursuant to the contract the tenant obtained possession of the land and erected permanent and costly structures thereon. The landlord was aware of the erection of those structures and must have realized that the tenant would not have constructed such a building unless he was assured of the possession of a permanent right in the land. In December, 1918, the landlord gave notice to the tenant of his refusal to specifically perform the contract. The landlord in 1923 brought a suit for ejectment against the defendant.

Held, that the landlord having allowed the tenant to erect structures on his land would not be allowed to eject the tenant as he acquiesced in tenant's conduct. Ramsden v. Dyson, (1866) 1 H.L. 129 and Gregory v. Mighell, (1881) 18 Ves. 328, Foll.; 21 All. 496 (P.C.), Dist.; 28 Cal. 693 (P.C.) and A.I.R. 1925 P. Generally speaking, if a party having an interest to prevent an act being done has full notice of its having been done and acquiesces in it so as to induce a reasonable belief that he consents to it, and the position of others is altered by their giving credit to his sincerity, he has no more right to challenge the act to their prejudice than he would have had if it had been done with his previous license. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 115—Conduct—Acceptance of benefit.

When an order shows plainly that it is intended to take effect in its entirety and that several parts of it depend upon each other, a person cannot adopt one part and repudiate another. For instance, if the Court directs that the suit shall be restored on the plaintiff paying the costs of the opposing party, there is no intention to benefit the latter, except on the terms mentioned in the order itself. If the party receives the costs, his act is tantamount to adopting the order. But if a party receives the benefit reserving his right to object to the order, he will not in that case be precluded from attacking it. A. I. R. 1927 Mad. 1009, Not foll. (Case-law discussed). —S. 115—Conduct—Land acquisition.

———Declaration as to Government right to quarry for certain purposes—Owner receiving compensation on that basis—Purpose exhausted—Subsequent suit—No estoppel.

Consequent upon a declaration under S. 6, Land Acquisition Act, 1894, that land was needed for a public purpose, viz., quarries in connexion with certain constructions with an insertion in it of statement under S. 3 (i) under Land Acquisition (Mines) Act, 1885 excluding certain mines and making necessary reservation, the owner of the land claimed compensation for minerals or an express order excluding them from acquisition and the Judge to whom reference was made under S. 18 of the Act held that the minerals had not been acquired. The owner also claimed compensation for a special stone which had high commercial value lying under the land, part of which was leased to a stone company and some part was in the occupation of tenants. The Superintending Engineer made a fair estimate of the quantity of stone available which it would have been profitable to remove to the railway siding, which was made the measure of compensation allowed in the award under S. 11 for the total value of the entire quantity of the available stone. The amount awarded was accepted by the owner. On the completion of the proposed construction the owner gave notice to Government under S. 4 of the Act of 1885 of his intention to work the minerls of the land covered by the declaration. The right of the owner was denied and consequently the owner sued for possession of the sub-soil including stones and other minerals lying in, upon or under the land. The defence was that the compensation already granted included all the value of all minerals and stones lying in, upon or under the surface of the land acquired. It was not denied that the stones were minerals,

Held, that on the construction of the declaration and the subsequent conduct of parties the stones other than those required for construction of the proposed work vested in the owner and he was not estopped from claiming to work them by reason of the course adopted in the proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act. ———Length of delay and nature of acts done during interval are material.

Thus the doctrine of laches in Courts of equity is not an arbitrary or technical doctrine. In a case in which it would be practically unjust to grant a remedy either because the party has by his conduct done that which might fairly be regarded as tantamount to a waiver of the remedy or where, he has by his conduct and neglect, though perhaps not waived the remedy yet has rendered the situation of the other party such as it would not be reasonable to render it, in both these cases, lapse of time and delay are most material if afterwards the remedy is asserted by the party making delay. A purchased a non-transferable occupancy holding in execution of a mortgage decree against the original tenants. Held, that the fact of the withdrawal of the deposit by the landlord amounted to a recognition by him of the tenancy of A.

Held also : that from the remark of the Court, " Heard pleaders on both sides ", it could not be assumed that the withdrawal had been made on protest.

There is no peculiarity in the law of estoppel in India as distinguished from that of England. The law of India is compendiously set forth in S. 115 of the Indian Evidence Act, Act 1 of 1872. Taking of a rent each year under a mistaken belief may bar by estoppel the owner from any claim for mesne profits during the particular year or years for which such rent was received. It would estop the owner from maintaining that the person who paid the rent possessed the property with a liability to account or possessed on any other or further terms than on payment of the rent made and taken. In cases of estoppel the onus of establishing the facts and circumstances from which estoppel arises rests upon the person pleading it. (Lord Shaw.) MITRA SEN SINGH v. MT. JANKI KUAR. 82 I. ———Representation, of a mere opinion or of a point of law.

No estoppel can ensue upon a representation, not of a fact, but of a mere opinion or of a point of law. But where there has been a representation as to the existence of a fact to a certain person and the latter believes it and acts upon it and his position is altered, so that he cannot be put back to his original position at all, at any rate, without great loss and inconvenience, estoppel will undoubtedly ensue. 30 All. 549; 34 All. 398 (P. ———Acts or declarations need not be intentional.

The law of this country gives no countenance to the doctrine that in order to create estoppel the person whose acts or declarations induced another to act in a particular way must have been under no mistake himself or must have acted with an intention to mislead or deceive. What the law and Indian Statute mainly regard is the position of the person who was induced to act and the principle on which the law and the statute rest is that it would be most inequitable and unjust to him that if another, by a representation made, or by conduct amounting to a representation has induced him to act as he would not otherwise have done, the person who made the representation should be allowed to deny or repudiate the effect of his former statement to the loss and injury of the person who acted on it. Section 115 is not exhaustive of the law of estoppel applicable to India.

A recital of a receipt in a deed will not operate as an estoppel, under any application of the principle embodied in S. 115 (as opposed to the terms of that section) because such recitals do not operate by way of estoppel in English law. ———Parties to whom it is available.

It makes no difference whether the persons against whom the estoppel is urged happen to be the defendants or the plaintiffs.

If the title of a plaintiff in a case in respect of a certain property has been admitted by the defendant or if the defendant's title has been admitted by the plaintiff and either of the parties to the case is estopped from denying the title of the other, it is difficult to perceive any distinction in the two cases.

If a plaintiff can assert his claim to a particular property, there being no estoppel in his way, and if he is entitled to a decree in respect of the property to which he is legally entitled, there is no reason why the plaintiff, whose title has been admitted by the defendant and which title the latter is estopped from denying, should not be given a decree in his favour. ———Conveyance by estoppel—English and Ceylon Laws.

Though there is a considerable analogy between the doctrine of English Law as to the conveyance by estoppel, and the doctrine of the Roman Dutch Law which prevails in Ceylon that doctrine is not identical with that of the English Law. The mode by reasoning by which it is reached is different, and the conclusions are not necessarily the same. This law admitted what was called the exceptio rei venditate et traditoe. Under this exception the purchaser who had got possession from a vendor who at the time had no title could rely upon a title subsequently acquired by the vendor not only against the vendor but against any one claiming under the vendor; and though delivery (traditio) was a part of the defence, if the purchaser had acquired possession without force or fraud he could use the exception though he had never received actual delivery from the vendor. Also if he had once been in possession without force or fraud, and had since lost possession he could recover it by the publician action, using the exception as a replication to any defence set up by the vendor or those claiming title under him. The principle does not rest upon estoppel by recital and is broader in its effect than the English rule.

Under the Roman-Dutch Law, the question is what was the property purported to be conveyed; and on all principles of construction the recitals can only be looked at for the purpose of assisting the Courts to arrive at the determination of the actual effect of the conveyance. The recitals as to how the transferor got the title to the property are not material; if the transferor had no title at the time, under the Roman-Dutch Law, his subsequent acquisition would make the transfer effective, howsoever the title is subsequently got. ———Where land is in the possession of a tenant not only is the possession consistent with the title of the landlord, but the tenant cannot by himself alter its character. The duty which he owes to the landlord of preserving his title prevents any acts of his from having the effect of acts of adverse possession. By disclaiming the landlord's title he forfeits the term but the landlord is not bound to take advantage of the forfeiture, and might enter upon the natural expiration of the term. When the tenant for years becomes a tenant at sufferance by holding over he is still unable to disseise his landlord and gain an adverse possession, or at any rate such disseisin would not be presumed from mere length of possession. ———An adverse possession by the tenant cannot be predicated from the mere fact of non-payment of rent or discontinuance of payment of rent unless in connection therewith the landlord has been apprised that the tenant claims title in himself. When the tenant thus disclaims the title of the landlord, claims title in himself, and the landlord has notice of that fact it has the effect of an ouster and disseisin, even though this has happened during the continuance of the term. The theory on which adverse possession becomes a perfect title is that the true owner has, by his own fault, failed to assert his right against the hostile holder. Consequently, where possession is originally, taken and held under the true owner, a clear positive, and continued disclaimer and disavowal of title, and an assertion of an adverse right brought home to the true owner are indispensable before any foundation can be laid for the operation of the statute of limitation. Without this, the length of the occupation is immaterial and does not affect the title; possession for the full period of limitation must have elapsed after repudiation before title based thereon can be acquired. If the rule were otherwise, the greatest injustice might be done; without such knowledge of the repudiation, the landlord has the right to rely upon the fiduciary relation under which the possession was originally taken. As has been well said, a possession commencing under the authority of or in subordination to the true title, does not become transformed into a hostile one, by a mere change in mental attitude. It must be shown that the true owner had knowledge of the adverse holding, or it must be so open and notorious as to raise a presumption of notice to him. (Mookerjee and Walmsley, JJ.). A tenant was let into possession by them prior to the insolvency and mortgage, who after the mortgage was executed attorned to the mortgagee and paid him rent. In a suit for ejectment by the mortgagee, the tenant claimed that he was not estopped from denying the title of the mortgagee.

Held, that the rent note was separated from and independent of the mortgage, and so the taint of illegality of the mortgage, if any, as one of the executants was an insolvent, does not extend to the rent note. Hence the tenant would be estopped from denying mortgagee's title. 32 Bom. 449 and A. I. R. 1927 Bom. 129, Dist.

Held further: that even though the tenant was originally let into possession by the mortgagors from the time when he passed a fresh rent note in favour of the mortgagee a new tenancy arose and he remained in possession under the mortgagee, and so his former possession did not prevent estoppel from arising. ———'At the beginning of tenancy.'

If once the relation of landlord and tenant is established between the parties, the tenant would be estopped from disputing the landlord's title. The words "at the beginning of the tenancy" cannot be construed to mean the time when the tenant was first let into possession. It may be that in some cases the tenant may be in possession before the new tenancy begins and he may attorn to another landlord by executing a lease which constitutes a new tenancy. The question, therefore, to be decided in each case under S. 116 would be whether a new tenancy had arisen and not whether the tenant had been let into possession by the landlord. In support of the contention that there is no relation of landlord and tenant between the parties the tenant may assert that the contract of tenancy is void or voidable on account of misrepresentation or fraud: 40 Mad. 561 (F.B.); 8 B.H.C (A.C.J.) 175 and 34 Bom. 329, Rel. on; 37 All. 557 (P.C.), Ref. (Patkar and Baker, JJ.). ———Evidence by child should be accepted with caution.

There is no more dangerous witness than young children. Any mistakes or discrepancies in their statements are ascribed to innocence of failure to understand, and undue weight is often given to what is merely a well taught lesson. Children have good memories and no conscience. They are easily taught stories and live in a world of make-believe so that they often become convinced that they have really seen the imaginary incident which they have been taught to relate. The evidence of a child should therefore be accepted with great caution. (Raza and Pullan, JJ.). MANNI v. EMPEROR, A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 406.

———Sufficient understanding.

A child of tender years is a competent witness when such child is intellectually sufficiently developed to understand what it has seen and afterwards to inform the Court about it; this sufficiency may be tested even in examination-in-chief: understanding is thus the sole test of competency under S. 118: 38 All. 49, Foll.; 41 Cal. 406, Rel. on, 10 All. 207, Expl. (Kalumal, A.J.C.). EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 118—Rejection of evidence.

———Procedure before admitting child as a witness.

Before examining a child of tender years as a witness, a Court should satisfy itself that the child is sufficiently intellectually developed to comprehend what he has seen and to give an intelligent account of it to the Court, by testing his intellectual capacity, by putting a few and simple and ordinary questions to him and the Court should record a brief proceeding so that the appellate Court may feel satisfied as to the capacity of the child to give evidence. If the Court is of opinion that by reason of tender years and defective or immature understanding the child could not have perceived the particular incident to prove which he is produced as a witness, the Court should not only refrain from administering the oath to him but should also decline to examine him as a witness: 38 All. 49 and 11 C.W.N. 51, Ref. (Agha Haidar, J.). TULSI v. EMPEROR. 110 I.C. 799= 10 A. I. Cr. R. 527=29 Cr.L.J. 767= A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 903.

———Capacity—Record of opinion as to, is not obligatory.

When the evidence of a child of tender years is adduced the Judicial Officer should for the sake of precaution ascertain as a preliminary measure by means of a few simple questions whether the intelligence of the child is such that (whether sworn or not) it is capable of giving testimony and it is certainly desirable that something should at the commencement of the record of the evidence of a witness of this character be entered to show that such a test has been in fact made. But the mere fact that the Judge omits to make the record will not render the evidence inadmissible, if the Judge is, as a matter of fact satisfied about the capacity to give the evidence. It does not extend to the parties themselves in civil cases so long as they conduct themselves properly, or to their solicitors whose assistance is necessary for the proper conduct of the case. There is no inflexible rule that if a party, plaintiff or defendant, gives his testimony, he must be disbelieved, because he is a party to the suit. Such a rule, if adopted, would nullify the provisions of S. 120 which provides that in all civil proceedings, the parties to the suit shall be competent witnesses. When a plaintiff has deposed in support of his case, his testimony must be scrutinised in the same manner as that of any other witness; and the Court is free to attach to the evidence that amount of credence which it appears to deserve, from his demeanour, deportment under cross-examination, motives to speak or hide the truth, means of knowledge, powers of memory, and other tests, by which the value of a statement of a witness can be ascertained, though not with absolute certainty, yet with such a reasonable amount of conviction as ought to justify a man of ordinary prudence in acting upon those statements. The protection offered by S. 132, Proviso, does not cover any and every answer given by a witness during the course of his trial. The compulsion contemplated in that section is something more than being put into the witness-box and being sworn to give evidence. The compulsion in the proviso refers to compulsion by Court and not compulsion under law. The witness, of course, need not ask in so many words the protection of the Court. The compulsion may be implied or explicit, and in every case it is a question of fact whether there was or was not compulsion. But a witness who answers a question or questions put to him without seeking the protection of S. 132 by objecting to the question put, and requesting to be excused, is not entitled to that protection. 3 Mad. 271 (F.B.); A I.R. 1926 Bom. 141 (F.B.); A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 906, (F.B.); A.I.R. 1924 All. 381; 16 All.88; 40 All. 271, Foll.; 42 All. 257 and A.I R. 1921 All. 362, Not foll.; A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 379; A.I.R. 1925 Rang. 345, Dist. (Devadoss and Waller, JJ.). ———Accomplice and informer—Distinction.

In criminal cases the distinction between an informer and an accomplice assumes at times considerable importance, and in order to determine whether a witness who first associated with wrongdoers and subsequently gave information to the police belongs to the first category or is an accomplice whose evidence cannot be accepted without corroboration, it has to be seen whether the witness had entered into the conspiracy for the sole purpose of detecting and betraying it or whether he is a person who concurred fully in the criminal designs of his co-conspirators for a time and joined in the execution of those till either out of fear or for some other reasons he turned on his former associates and gave information to the police. If at the time when he joined the conspiracy he had no intention of bringing his associates to book, but his sole object was to partake in the commission of the crime, he cannot be called an informer but is an accomplice; and his position is not modified simply because later on he turns round and carries information to the police: A. A person was present when the plans for committing a dacoity were hatched and had agreed to go to the meeting place in the evening armed with a revolver. He returned soon after and remained there for more than six hours but during this period he took no steps whatever either to inform the police or his master that a dacoity was contemplated. He then actually proceeded to a spot near the house where the dacoity was to be committed and took part in the preparations for committing the offence. It was only after it had been decided to postpone the dacoity till the moon had gone down and he had been sent to the town to bring food for two of the offenders that he for the first time disclosed the whole affair.

Held, that in view of these facts the person cannot but be regarded as an accomplice and his evidence needs corroboration in material particulars against each convict. (Tek Chand, J.). KARIM BAKHSH v. EMPEROR. 109 I.C. 593=9 Lah. 550=

———It is not safe to convict on the sole testimony of accomplice unless corroborated in material particulars by direct or circumstantial evidence.

The evidence of accomplices is always admissible and is always relevant, but under a very old practice of the Courts in England some evidence is accepted only with great caution and after the closest scrutiny and is not usually accepted against any individual person unless it is corroborated. Although it is not illegal to convict on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice, there is a consensus of opinion that a conviction on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is rarely justified. The practice in India is the same as the practice in England. The evidence in corroboration must be independent testimony which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect him with the crime. In other words it must be evidence which implicates him, that is, which confirms in some material particulars not only the evidence that the crime has been committed, but also that the prisoner committed it. The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime, it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connexion with the crime: A. I. A confession of an accused person implicating a co-accused under S. 30 cannot be considered as the same thing as 'the testimony of an accomplice, which is referred to in S. 133. ———Conviction on uncorroborated evidence, when approver is a scoundrel is not warranted.

The decision in each case must depend on its own particular circumstances and no general rule can be laid down as to when an accomplice's uncorroborated evidence alone should be accepted and acted on against an accused. A conviction on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice is to be regarded as exceptional. The two illustrations given under S. 114 of the Act clearly indicate that the application of S. 133 must be exceedingly rare. There is no positive legal bar to taking an approver's evidence as a basis for a conviction but unless some reliable corroboration on a material point were superadded to it, it would, in almost all cases, be unsafe to accept it as conclusive. Where in several respects the approver's evidence did not appear to the Trial Court to be quite satisfactory and the likelihood of his "playing a double game" strongly suggested itself at one time, and the approver was a thorough paced scoundrel.

The real test of the evidence of the approver is whether it has been believed or not and when it has been corroborated on many points and has not been shown to be false in any particular it should be accepted; and when once it has been accepted as a whole corroboration as regards the identity of each of several accused

EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 133—Corroboration, extent and nature.

———Principles explained.

Although under S. 133, Evidence Act, an accomplice is a competent witness against an accused person, and a conviction is not illegal merely because it proceeds upon the uncorroborated testimony of such accomplice, the rule of caution that such testimony should be supported by extrinsic evidence connecting the accused with the crime is now regarded as a rule of law, and although it is not illegal to convict a person on the uncorroborated testimony of an approver, the Courts in points of facts always insist upon the rule being followed.

What is required is some additional evidence rendering it probable that the story of the accomplice is true and that it is reasonably safe to act upon it.

The nature of the corroboration will necessarily vary according to the particular circumstances of the offence charged and it would be in a high degree dangerous to attempt to formulate the kind of evidence which would be regarded as corroboration, except to say that corroborative evidence is evidence which shows or tends to show that the story of the accomplice, that the accused committed the crime, is true not merely that the crime has been committed, but that it was committed by the accused. The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime ; it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connexion with the crime.

Corroborative evidence need not be sufficient in itself to base a conviction on. Confirmation of the story of an accomplice does not mean that there should be independent evidence of the accomplice's account of the crime itself. What the law clearly requires is that some relevant and material part of the approver's story incriminating the accused should have support from an independent source. This supplies a test of the truth of the accomplice's narrative as a whole by checking it in some relevant portion: Rex. v. Baskerville, (1916) 2 K. B. 658, Foll. (Fforde, J. on difference between Agha Haidar and Broadway, JJ.). BARKALI v. EMPEROR. 103 I. C. 43=28 Cr. L. J. 625=8 A. I. Cr. R. 273= A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 581.

———Must connect the prisoner with the offence.

It is not sufficient that the approver's testimony is confirmed as to the circumstances of the felony but it must be proved that the testimony is corroborated in some material circumstances, such circumstance connecting and identifying the prisoner with the offence. (Shadi Lal, C.J. and Jai Lal, J.). KATTU v. EMPEROR. 98 I. C. 190= 27 P. L. R. 615=8 L. L. J. 616= 27 Cr. L. J. 1294=A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 10.

———Corroboration as to the part played by the accomplice.

It is not sufficient that the approver should be corroborated with regard to the actual commission of the crime itself; for such corroboration merely shows that he himself took part in the offence. Experience requires that the approver should also be corroborated in material points as to the part played by his accomplices. The amount of corroboration in this respect as indeed in respect of all corroboration of an approver's evidence, must depend upon the view which the Court takes of the approver's character and of his general demeanour in the witness-box. ———Defence being false is not corroboration of approver.

Section 133 contains the rule of law regarding the testimony of accomplices and S. 114, Ill. (b) is merely a guide to assist the Courts, though, as stated by Johnstone, C.J. in 17 P.R. 1915, in a vast majority of cases prudence requires that there shall be corroboration. No hard and fast rules can however, be laid down to regulate the extent and nature of such corroboration, this being dependant entirely on the cirmstances of each case. The fabrication of a false defence cannot be regarded as sufficient to corroborate an approver. (Scott-Smith and Broadway, JJ.). MAHANT NARAIN DAS v. EMPEROR. 68 I. C. 113= 3 Lah. 144=4 L. L. ———Nature and extent of corroboration required discussed—English and Indian Law on the point do not differ.

Confirmation (corroboration) does not mean that there should be independent evidence of that which the accomplice relates, otherwise his testimony would be unnecessary. But one accomplice's evidence is not corroboration of the testimony of another accomplice. (1848) 3 Cox C. C. 526 and 531.

Evidence in corroboration must be evidence which implicates the accused, i.e., which confirms in some material particular not only the evidence that the crime has been committed but also that the prisoner committed it.

The corroboration need not be direct evidence that the accused committed the crime; it is sufficient if it is merely circumstantial evidence of his connection with the crime. Where the law otherwise, many crimes which are usually committed between accomplices in secret, such as incest, offences with females, etc., could never be brought to justice. Rex v. Baskerville, (1916) 2 K. There is no statutory prohibition against accepting the evidence of an approver who is thoroughly unreliable and base a conviction upon his uncorroborated testimony, but to do so is extremely dangerous especially where such evidence when examined is obviously open to criticism from the point of view of possible mistake, or intentional concealment or misrepresentation. The confession of a criminal who has confessed his guilt, in so far as it implicates other persons besides himself, must be treated as very little if at all superior in value to that of an accomplice who has received a pardon and therefore where the Court has a witness belonging to each of these classes the question necessarily arises as a matter of logic whether unless both these witnesses survive every test which can reasonably and ought properly to be applied to witnesses so that in the result one can say with confidence that neither of them has swerved in substance from the truth the problem remains the same or whether tainted evidence is made better in quality by being doubled in quantity. But this "taint" must be removed to such an extent that the Court is prepared to believe the testimony of the approver in the same way and to the same extent as the testimony of an ordinary witness whom it considers to be worthy of credit. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 133—Value of accomplice's evidence.

———Principles explained.

It is generally unsafe to convict a person on the evidence of accomplices unless corroborated in material particulars. In considering whether this maxim applies to a particular case it must be remembered that all persons coming technically within the category of accomplices cannot be treated on precisely the same footing.

Accomplice evidence is untrustworthy for three reasons:—(i) He is likely to swear falsely to shift the guilt from him; (ii) He being a participator in crime is likely to disregard the sanction of an oath; and (iii) He gives evidence under promise of or in expectation of a pardon. Therefore if the principal evidence is of accomplices, it is tainted evidence and hence there is need for corroboration. 26 Bom. 193; 14 Bom. 115, Foll. (Kinkhede, A.J.C.). ———Withdrawal of prosecution does not make him independent witness—Corroboration of one accomplice by another is not independent.

The withdrawal of prosecution against an accomplice relegates him from the position of a co-accused to his original position of an accomplice who had for all practical purposes earned complete immunity for his participation in the crime. His evidence under such circumstances could not be a piece of independent evidence. To regard the testimony of one accomplice as corroborated by the testimony of another accomplice is to hold that there is corroboration where under law or fact there is none at all. In dealing with the evidence of an accomplice the Judge is not bound to rely on such statements only as are corroborated by other reliable evidence. ———Accomplice against whom case is withdrawn—One to whom pardon is tendered—Position of.

An accomplice witness against whom the case has been withdrawn under S. 494 is less reliable than one to whom a pardon has been tendered under S. 337. The latter is pardoned conditionally and has before him, as an inducement to stick to the truth, the constant apprehension that his statement may be used against him in a trial hereafter if he is proved to have given false evidence on any point. On the other hand the accomplice witness who has not received a conditional pardon is a freer man in the witness-box since he is not pinned down to a previous statement which may be based on tutored material by the fear of prosecution for perjury if his deposition in Court does not correspond exactly with that previous statement. There is no provision of Indian Statute Law, nor is there any principle of natural justice, which makes an accomplice as such an incompetent witness at the trial of another person in respect of the offence in the commission of which he was an accomplice. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 133—Value of approver's evidence.

———Long delay in giving statements—Taint of suspicion.

An approver may be telling the truth and it is quite probable that he himself had a hand in the murder but his statements as to who his accomplices were must be corroborated by reliable evidence before it can form the basis of a conviction. The corroboration offered in this case was the statement of two men who apparently knew something about the matter from the very beginning but refused to make any statement until the third day of the police investigation. The delay may be due to their reluctance to implicate the accused after they had promised not to give information but it was obvious that statements obtained after such a long delay must be regarded with suspicion: and these witnesses may possibly be scheming themselves at the expense of innocent men. Even if these witnesses bear no enmity to the appellants and are related to them, the long delay in making their statements makes their evidence liable to grave suspicion. (*Chevis, C. —S. 133—Value of approver's evidence.

———Dacoits, drawn from different places and committing offence for over a long period—Consistent correct identification of every accused not necessary.

In the case of a gang the members of which had been collected from an area with a diameter of over fifty miles, and had been concerned in dacoities in the course of which more than a hundred different individuals had taken part in the offences and where the offences had continued over a period of four years, it would almost be a miracle if any man had been able consistently to identify correctly every man who had taken part in these offences, or who had belonged to the gang. No doubt, in such a case the failure of an approver to identify a particular man on one occasion, although he identified him on others, weakens his evidence considerably in respect to that particular man. But this circumstance does not show such a man to be innocent and cannot outweigh other evidence which establishes his guilt. Even where the approver's evidence is weak against a particular individual, that particular individual should be convicted when there is strong evidence apart from the evidence of the approver to establish that he was a member of the gang. (Stuart, C. J. and Raza, J.). KHILAWAN v. EMPEROR. 112 I. C. 337= 5 O. W. N. 760=29 Cr. L. J. 1009= 11 A. I. Cr. R. 273=A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 430.

———Principle explained.

The evidence of an approver does not differ from the evidence of any other witness save in one particular respect, namely, that the evidence of an accomplice is regarded ab initio as open to grave suspicion. Accordingly, if the suspicion which attaches to the evidence of an accomplice be not removed, that evidence should not be acted upon unless corroborated in some material particular, and if the suspicion attaching to the accomplice's evidence is removed then that evidence may be acted upon, even though uncorroborated and the guilt of the accused may be established upon that evidence alone. There is nothing in S. 133 to suggest that the statement of one approver cannot be regarded as corroborating that made by another approver. Appellants were seen with the approver at Sukho and arrested in his company at Mandra. The possession of the three tickets all from Chakala to Mandra and bearing consecutive numbers was strong corroboration of the approver's story as to the appellants having accompanied him to the scene of the occurrence,

Per Subhedar, A. J. C.—The rule in S. 114, Illus. (b), that an accomplice is unworthy of credit unless he is corroborated in material particulars has become a rule of practice of so universal application that it has now almost acquired the force of law.

Per Jackson, A. J. C.—S. 133 cannot be entirely nullified by judicial decisions and there may be cases in which the rule in S. 114, Illus. (b), should not be applied. The question arising in every case where the uncorroborated evidence of the accomplice has to be considered is whether it can be believed or not. Further when the evidence is strengthened by corroboration of other facts of the story by evidence of several accomplices or by confessions of co-accused, the question whether the maxim should still apply must receive careful consideration: A.I.R. 1921 Nag. 39, Rel. on. (Jackson, A.J.C. on difference between Staples and Subhedar, A.J.Cs.). ———Duty of prosecution to show that evidence is of accomplices and is corroborated.

It is mainly the duty of the prosecution to bring the accomplice character of the evidence to the notice of the Court and then invite it to believe it by reference to the corroborative evidence on record. An accused is under no legal obligation to do so. He can keep quiet and take advantage of the flaw in the evidence brought by the prosecution against him, or in short, of the weakness of the prosecution case. (Kinkhede, A.J.C.). It would be a perversion of the lesson gained by accumulated experience of the conduct of an accomplice to adopt any such rule of practice as that where corroboration is not possible his testimony may be accepted as true without corroboration. An accomplice is too immoral a person to be worthy of credit without corroboration in material particulars and if corroboration is not forthcoming because it is not possible in the nature of things that it should be forthcoming it does not make the accomplice less immoral. If he denies to have made any such statement and it is intended to contradict him the relevant portions of the record contrary to his statement in Court must be read to him and the witness should be given the opportunity to reconcile the same. So far as proceedings before charge are concerned copies of witnesses, statements made to the police should not be granted until the stage of cross-examination is reached. Under S. 145, until the occasion arises for putting the statement to the witness it cannot legally be used for any purpose whatsoever. It should not therefore be placed in the accused's hands until that stage in the trial has been reached when he may so use it. (Curgenven, J.). PUBLIC PROSECUTOR, MADRAS v. VEDI.

———Procedure indicated.

A copy of the statement made before the police cannot be used against the witness till he has been confronted with it. The right procedure, when a prosecution witness is contradicting himself, is to ask the Judge to look into the diary and decide whether the accused person should not have a copy of the statement. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 145—Statements to police.

———First information report—Statement by third parties to police during investigation and counter-information against complainant or his party—Principles explained.

The first information report against the accused is clearly not a statement within the contemplation of S. 162 because it is not made in the course of an investigation. Such report has to be tended under one or other of the provisions of the Evidence Act. The usual course is for the prosecution to call the informant and for the first information to be tendered as corroboration under S. 157; but it could also be tendered in a proper case under S. 32 (1) as a declaration as to the cause of the informant's death, or as part of the informant's conduct (of the res gestae) under S. 8. Theoretically, the defence could prove the information to impeach the informant's credit under S. 155 or to contradict him under S. 145.

Statements made by third parties to the police in the course of their investigation can be used as corroboration under S. 157, or in contradiction under S. 145 or to impeach credit under S. 155 provided the person who made the statement is called as a witness. This would apply to the prosecution and to the defence indifferently under the Evidence Act. But S. 162 of the Cr. P. Code enacts first that if such a statement is not recorded in writing it cannot be used in evidence in any circumstance or for either side or for any purpose: A.I.R. 1920 Rang. 116 (F.B.): A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 399 and A.I.R. 1924 Bom. 510, Foll.

If such a statement has been recorded in writing then it cannot be used for any purpose but one and that by the defence. Provided that the person who made it is called as a witness for the prosecution the defence may apply for a copy of the statement and if it be proved may use it under S. 145 of the Evidence Act to contradict that witness.

It sometimes happens that after the first information has been laid against the accused, a counter-information is laid against the complainant or his party by a member of the accused's party who is not himself an accused. As this comes under S. 154 and must be reduced to writing and signed, it cannot come within S. 162. Whether it is admissible at the trial of the accused will depend upon the circumstances and must be decided under Evidence Act. The police cannot of course treat statements as informations unless they are really received as such and come truly and properly within S. 154. (Rankin and Duval, JJ.). —S. 149—Leading questions.

———If may be asked without declaring witness hostile.

Section 154 read with S. 143 provides that the Court may allow the party to put leading questions to his own witnesses. This does not necessarily mean that he must declare the witness hostile and cross-examine him. It is only when he declares the witness hostile and cross-examines him that he cannot rely upon his evidence. Where the Public Prosecutor asks a witness some questions with the permission of the Court desiring to get from him not a contradiction of what he said but something in addition, he cannot be said to have cross-examined the witness. The questions are merely leading questions.

Per Lort-Williams, J., contra.—Sections 143 and 154 read together do not give power to prosecution to put leading questions to their own witnesses even with the assent of the Judge. If the plaintiff's case was that she did not inherit the property of her husband by reason of her unchastity during his life-time, then the question would be relevant. The grounds that witnesses do not support the prosecution story, but they are neighbours of the accused and they have been won over by them, that one of them is a tout and the other is a man of straw and quite unreliable, are no reasons for declaring the witnesses hostile; and unless there is something in their depositions which is conflicting with earlier statements made by them, which would afford ground for thinking that they have been gained over by the defence, the prosecution is not entitled to declare them hostile. EVIDENCE ACT (1872), S. 154—Purpose of cross-examination.

———Definition of—Treating witness as hostile is matter for Court's discretion.

A witness who is unfavourable is not necessarily hostile; a hostile witness is one who from the manner in which he gives his evidence shows that he is not desirous of telling the truth. Where a witness stands in the situation which naturally makes him adverse to a party desiring his testimony, the party calling the witness is not entitled as of right to cross-examine him. The matter is entirely in the discretion of the Court whether to permit the person calling the witness to put any questions to him which might be put in cross-examination by the adverse party. 12 M. ———Necessary—Witness cannot be treated as hostile witness as of right—Principles to determine who is a hostile witness discussed.

There is with regard to S. 154 no distinction on principle between an attesting witness whom a party is obliged to call and any other witness whom he may cite of his own choice; but the Court may, in the exercise of its discretion, be more easily persuaded in the former case than in the latter. In view of the provision of the Indian Evidence Act, there is no room for application, in this country, of the view taken in some English cases, that a necessary witness, that is, one whom a party is compelled to call and who may therefore be considered rather the witness of the Court than of the party, as an attesting witness to a Will, can be discredited as of right by his own side.

Two important points must be borne in mind; first that a witness is considered adverse when, in the opinion of the Judge, he bears a hostile animus to the party calling him and not merely when his testimony contradicts his proof; in other words, a hostile witness is one who from the manner in which he gives his evidence shows that he is not desirous of telling the truth; and, secondly, when a witness is treated as hostile and cross-examined by the party calling him, this must be done to discredit the witness altogether and not merely to get rid of part of his testimony. Case-law referred. (Mookerjee and Fletcher, JJ.). —S. 154—Result of cross-examination.

———Position of hostile witness—Rule as to.

The evidence of a hostile witness cannot in part be relied upon and the rest of it discarded or rejected. When a witness is declared hostile so that leave to cross-examine is granted to the party calling him, it is necessary that the Judge should explain what the position is that then arises, namely that by asking for leave to cross-examine the witness, the party calling him admits that he is not a witness of truth and one whose evidence is not entitled to credit, who is prepared to make one statement on oath at one time and another at another time and that the evidence of such witness should be rejected and left out of account in the minds of the jury. It is a rule which leans in favour of the accused and as such ought not to be departed from lightly. The Judge should tell the jury to reject the evidence of such witness altogether and his omission to do so amounts to misdirection: A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 463; Alexander v. Gibson, 2 Camp. 556, Ref. (C. C. Ghose and Pearson, JJ.). PANCHANAN GOGAI v. EMPEROR. 51 C.L.J. 203=34 C.W.N. 526=A.I.R. 1930 Cal. 276.

———No reliance in part.

A party cannot be allowed to say that his witness is a truthful witness so far as a part of his evidence is concerned but an untruthful witness so far as some other portion is concerned. Once a party cross-examines his own witness he must be held to no longer rely on him: A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 139 and A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 463, Rel. on. (Cuming and Lort-Williams, JJ.). ———Discrediting certain statements does not amount to discrediting whole of the evidence.

Seeking to discredit the statements of witnesses considered hostile only on certain points does not amount to discrediting the evidence in toto, of these witnesses, and it must be a matter for the Court, on the particular facts in each case to credit or to discredit the different portions of the evidence of each witness as in other cases: A.I.R. 1926 Cal. 139, Diss. (Crump and Madgavkar, JJ.). ———When a witness who has been called by the prosecution is permitted to be cross-examined on behalf of the prosecution under the provisions of S. 154, the result of that course being permitted is to discredit that witness altogether and not merely to get rid of a part of his testimony. If they tell a different story in Court, the report can be used to contradict them or discredit their testimony. Held, that the Subordinate Judge was right in the view he took and that the procedure was justified by S. 159. The weight of the evidence, the objection to the document upon the ground that its not having been produced at the proper time renders its authenticity the subject of suspicion, and all other grounds upon which a document can be successfully impeached still remain open, but refusal to permit a man to refresh his memory by proper relevant contemporaneous documents might lead to a grave injustice. Very great confusion of thought or rather lack of thought is frequently shown in Civil Courts in regard to the admission in evidence of horoscopes and similar documents. A horoscope is often accepted as substantive evidence of the date of the birth of the person mentioned in it, perhaps with a vague idea of reference to S. 32. No part of that section can make any statement of a date in such a document a relevant fact. A horoscope can be used to help in proving the date of birth stated in it only under S. 159 or S. 160 and then of course only if the person who wrote it or a person who read it soon after it was written is examined as a witness. Very nearly the same remarks will apply to other documents in which the age of a person is stated, such as the deed of adoption or rather of initiation as a "chela." (Hallifax, A. J. C.). —S. 165—Intervention with questions.

———Court intervening with questions to witnesses—Unless counsel's legitimate work was so impeded as to amount to mis-trial, no grievance can be made out of this.

The fact that the Trial Judge intervened with questions during the examination and cross-examination of witnesses, misled Counsel and left him under the impression that the Court was not prepared to accept the statements made by the witnesses concerned, is obviously not a matter which can be set right on appeal, unless it is established that the intervention of the Judge with questions, with a view to clear up obscurities, to fill up lacunae, to supplement deficiencies, and generally to elicit the truth, exceeded the bounds of even the comprehensive provisions of S. 165 of the Evidence Act, and so impeded the legitimate work of Counsel engaged in the cause as to amount to a mis-trial, leading to failure of justice.

During the progress of the trial, it is not wise for Counsel to anticipate the final opinion of the Judge even as to the veracity of a witness, which may have to be judged, not solely from his individual statements, but from the testimony taken in conjunction with all the other facts brought out in the course of the litigation. EXCESS PROFITS DUTY ACT (10 of 1919).

—S. 2—Business.

——Royal Calcutta Turf Club carries on business and is liable to excess profits duty on collections from non-members—Test explained.

The Royal Calcutta Turf Club is carrying on an "adventure or concern in the nature of trade" and consequently is carrying on a "business" within the meaning of S. 3 of the Act, in respect of sums received from persons other than members of the Club, under the following heads:—(1) Entrance fees to the stand paddocks and enclosures or gate-money; (2) Entrance fees paid by owners of horses; (3) Book-makers license fees; and (4) Percentage on the totalisators. Carlisle and Silloth Golf Club v. Smith, 2 K. B. 177, Foll.

The fact that the members of the Club do not receive any profit out of the transactions which are carried on by the Club, and that the admitted surplus is used for the purpose of subscribing to charities, is not material.

The test is whether the moneys are received by the Club and in exchange for something which is given by the Club and in respect of which profit is made. (Sanderson, C. J., Teunon and Richardson, JJ.). THE ROYAL CALCUTTA-TURF CLUB v. SECY. OF STATE. 66 I. C. 473=25 C. W. N. 734=A. I. R. 1921 Cal. 633.

EXCESS PROFITS DUTY ACT (1919), S. 18—Rules under R. 24 (3).

——Turf club—Carries on 'business' and liable to excess profits duty on collections from non-members—Test pointed out.

A turf club is liable to excess profits duty in respect of the following sources of income in so far as the sums received under these heads are not paid by the members of the club;

(1) Entrance fees to the stand, paddocks, and enclosures, or gate money,
(2) Entrance fees paid by owners of horses,
(3) Book-makers' license fees,
(4) Percentages on the totalisators.

It must be held that the Turf Club is carrying on an "adventure or concern in the nature of trade" and is consequently carrying on a "business" within the meaning of S. 3 of the Act, in respect of sums received under the four heads mentioned from persons other than members. It is not material what is the ultimate destination of the surplus, if any, which the Turf Club receives in respect of these matters. The test is whether moneys are received by the club from non-members of the club and in exchange for something which is given by the club and in respect of which profit is made. Carlisle and Selloth Golf Club v. Smith, (1912) 2 K.B. 177, Affirmed on appeal; (1913) 3 K.B. 74, Foll. (Sanderson, C.J., Teunon and Richardson, JJ.). —S. 5—Capital.

——Moneys invested in shares in public companies and Government securities which have been treated as part of the capital of the firm, are "capital employed in the business of the firm" and consequently, as such must be included in the capital computation both for the accounting period and "the standard years". The proviso in Sch. Agents, secretaries and treasurers, or agent of a mill company under the usual form of agreement and remunerated by a commission which would depend either on the out-turn or on the amount of profits are not to be considered as carrying on a business excepted under Sch. I.

Where all that the agreement provides for is that subject to the control of the Directors of a certain Company a certain firm shall have the general conduct and management of the business and affairs of the company the firm are not officers of the company, in the strict sense of the word, nor are they servants. They are a firm which for a certain agreed remuneration has consented to do the work which is detailed in the agreement. —Application.

———Application for execution of decree.

When certain decrees were sought to be executed the judgment-debtor objected that he was not liable. The objection having been substantially upheld the execution was permitted only in respect of certain small items. Thereupon the judgment-debtor preferred appeals to the High Court. Subsequently the execution proceedings, were dismissed for default. The appeals having later on ended in favour of the decree-holder the decree-holder again applied for execution this time varying the list of properties against which the decrees were to be attached,

Held, that the original execution applications were revived and that what happened after the Court upheld the objection was immaterial and that the decree-holder could consequently execute the decrees, in toto. ———Successive applications for execution when and to what extent barred.

There is nothing to prevent several applications being made, directed against and linked into partnership of private property. There is nothing to prevent a succession of applications directed against persons who are ascertained to be, or believed to be partners in the particular venture out of which the decree has arisen. The limitation however that is imposed on all these applications is that, if there has been a previous application, in which there has been a definite decision affecting a particular piece of property, or a particular person, and from that decision nothing has been done by way of appeal or institution of suit if either of these methods were available, that decision is a final decision between the parties, and if in any subsequent proceedings, the point again becomes material the parties are bound by that previous decision, and the matter cannot be reopened. ———No revival occurs where decree-holder himself is at fault but it occurs where progress is arrested in spite of decree-holder.

———Mortgage suit—Compromise decree.

A prior mortgagee brought suit on his mortgage. He impleaded, besides the mortgagors, the puisne mortgagees. By means of a compromise, certain property belonging to the mortgagors was to be considered as sold to the plaintiff for a certain sum. Out of this sum, plaintiff was to pay the amount due to puisne mortgagees. It was stipulated that the puisne mortgagees were to recover the same from the plaintiff by execution or by a fresh suit. Until payment, the property of the plaintiff was to remain charged with the sum fixed for payment to him. A decree was accordingly passed in terms of the compromise. Plaintiff did not pay. Thereupon the puisne mortgagees put in an application for a final decree. It was contended that the Court had no jurisdiction to pass the final decree in their favour because it had passed a decree originally embodying the terms of the compromise against them,

Held, that it would be placing altogether too narrow a construction on the decree to hold that it was only passed against the mortgagors and the fact that it was stipulated that the puisne mortgagees could take out execution of this decree or bring a new suit tended to support the view that the decree was meant to be in their favour against the plaintiff. If the Court passes an order in contravention of O. 20, R. 12, it is not a nullity owing to total want of jurisdiction. Per Kulwant Sahay, J.—It is open to the Court executing the decree to refuse to execute it, if it finds that the decree was a nullity.

If a minor or a lunatic is properly described in the plaint and if a guardian is nominated for him, the Court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit. If the minor or lunatic was effectively represented in the suit, the lack of a formal order appointing a guardian would only amount to an irregularity of procedure which would not be fatal to the suit. The decree rendered in such suit is not a nullity. Hence the Court executing the decree could not go behind the decree and examine the validity thereof. 50 I. ———Court ordering profits to be ascertained in execution—Order irregular—Executing Court — Must ascertain the mesne profits.

No doubt under O. 20, R. 12, the amount of the mesne profits must be determined during the course of the suit and an enquiry as to mesne profits under this rule is not a proceeding in execution, but a proceeding in continuation of the original suit. But if the Court instead of passing an order under O. 20, R. 12, orders the mesne profits to be recovered in execution then the decree though irregular is binding between the parties. In such a case there is not any want of jurisdiction in the Court passing an order in contravention of O. 20, R. 12, but it is merely an erroneous or irregular exercise of jurisdiction. Executing Court has no jurisdiction to go into the question whether the Court passing the decree committed any error in the exercise of its jurisdiction. It is, no doubt, true that a judgment-debtor may, in certain cases, offer objection to the effect that certain property of his is not saleable in the case of a money decree, and such objection may, in certain circumstances, be urged even after the confirmation of the sale. The case of a mortgage decree is, however, different. An attack on such a mortgage decree to the effect that property ordered to be sold by it is not legally saleable, is, in reality, an attack upon the validity of the decree. The executing Court is bound to assume in this connexion that the decree has been made with jurisdiction and to allow an executing Court to hold that property specifically ordered to be sold by it was, in reality, not saleable, would amount to rendering the said decree so far a nullity. —Execution by Collector.

———Once the Collector executes a partition decree, the Court cannot re-send the case to him for re-partition—Collector must follow the terms of the decree.

Where once the Collector effects a partition the Court cannot send the case back to him for re-partition. But if the Collector disregards the terms of the decree and divides the property in contravention of its terms, clearly the Court is entitled to interfere. 42 Bom. 689, Expl. The Collector, when asked to partition lands in accordance with a decree, must follow the terms of the decree, and he is not at liberty to read the decree together with the judgment so that he partitions the lands in a manner which is not contemplated by the decree. —Jurisdiction.

———Executing Court can decide whether Court passing decree had jurisdiction.

No doubt executing Court cannot question the validity or legality of a decree if there is a decree in existence. But it must be able to decide whether a decree exists at all and therefore where the Court has no inherent jurisdiction to pass the so-called decree, the decree has no real existence in law and the executing Court within those narrow limits can decide whether the decree was passed by a Court which, for lack of inherent jurisdiction, could not pass such a decree; for that point settles the question as to whether there is an existing decree upon which the executing Court can take action. But before execution can proceed against the legal representative of the deceased judgment-debtor, the decree-holder must get an order for substitution from the Court which passed the decree. ———Mere small inadvertance.

The result of holding, that even though an execution application for a large amount might come to be dismissed by the first Court for non-appearance or for failure to put in some paper or some such formal defect the Court has absolutely no power at all to set aside the order of dismissal under any provisions of law, would be virtually to hold that a person by some such small inadvertance would be entirely losing the benefit of a decree passed in his favour by a Court of law : A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 980, Doubted. (Wallace and Srinivasa Aiyangar, JJ.). In execution of a decree for partition of house and lands, at the instance of the plaintiff a Commissioner was appointed to effect a division of a house first. The Commissioner made a report, but before the report could be given effect to, the house was burnt down. The plaintiff thereupon applied to drop the execution proceedings, but the defendant insisted to carry on the same execution proceedings.

Held, that the defendant should be allowed to continue the application for execution and need not issue a fresh darkhast. (Macleod, C. J. and Coyajee, J.). CHUNILAL JAMNADAS v. MULCHAND HARJIVANDAS. 67 I.C. 417=46 Bom. 937= 24 Bom. L. R. 440=A.I.R. 1923 Bom. 23.

———Maintenance decree creating charge.

The language of R. 14, O. 34, C. P. Code makes it clear that the rule does not apply unless the decree, falls within the description of a decree for payment of money in satisfaction of a claim arising under the mortgage or charge. The mortgage or charge mentioned in this rule must obviously be a mortgage or charge existing prior to the date of the decree and not one created by the decree.

It is not obligatory upon a person to take recourse to a suit to enforce a charge on immovable property created by a consent decree. (1919) 43 Bom. 631, Distinguished. A decree for maintenance may be made in such a form as to entitle the plaintiff to realise in execution not only the arrears, which had accrued due at the date of the institution of the suit but also future maintenance ———Judgment-debtor granting lease of his land to decree-holder for 20 years in satisfaction of decree—Executing Court cannot afterwards curtail the period.

A money-decree was fully satisfied in 1912 by the grant of a lease for 20 years to the decree holder of some land belonging to the judgment-debtor. Some years later the executing Court on the application of the judgment-debtor, cancelled the remaining period of the lease and directed that possession of the land be restored to the judgment-debtor on payment to the decree-holder a certain sum found on calculation to be due to the decree-holder.

Held, that the executing Court had become functus officio as soon as the lease was executed and the decree was fully satisfied and was not therefore, competent subsequently to reduce the term of the lease which had been given in full satisfaction of the decree in 1912. —Scope of.

———Compromise in execution proceedings—Limitation.

A compromise can be entered into much in the same manner as in a regular suit in execution proceedings, which does not extinguish the decree; and the Court executing the decree is bound, subject to the conditions indicated by O. 23, R. 3, C.P. Code to give effect to the compromise; and after recording such a compromise the decree is adjusted and the decree to be executed is the adjusted decree. The limitation applicable in such a case is that contained under Art. 182, Cl. (4), and under Cl. (6) of the same article there would be a period of three years allowed for the issue of the notice to the judgment-debtor to pay under the decree. (Prideaux, A.J.C.). ———Practice pointed out.

It is not right for a Judge, upon the making of a decree to stay the execution of it unconditionally without very much better cause being shown by the defendant than that his property is tied up and that he cannot lay his hands upon it for the moment. That may be a ground for staying execution conditionally on the judgment-creditor being in some way secured. It is not correct, under these circumstances, to stay execution unconditionally, or by imposing a simple condition as to giving security for a small amount for defendant's appearance in six months' time. —Miscellaneous.

———Agency Court—Validity of decree can be questioned.

Civil Procedure Code not being applicable to Agency Courts the ordinary rule that an executing Court will not canvass the legality of the decree is not applicable. Bidders in auction-sale should be presumed to make an offer on the condition that it would be accepted or rejected within the period during which such sales ordinarily last and in the absence of anything to show that they consented to the period being protracted to any length of time it must be held that the offer was not intended to be open, for a number of days (in this case 6 weeks.) Sale is not concluded when a property is knocked down and the deposit made. Having regard to the provisions of the third condition of sale set out in Form No. 29, Appendix E of the First Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code, the Court has discretion in the matter and the order directing a re-sale of the property is within the Court's jurisdiction. —Binding nature of.

———Wrong property sold—Procedure.

Where plaintiff allows by mistake one of his properties to be sold at a Court-auction along with other properties of his,

Held, (1) that the Court sale was not a nullity, (2) that without setting aside the sale a mere suit to recover the property from the purchaser does not lie. (Macleod, C. J. and Coyajee, J.). NAGA BHATTA v. NAGAPPA. 67 I. C. 857= 24 Bom. L.R. 423=46 Bom. 914= A.I.R. 1923 Bom. 62.

———Sale in execution is not binding on persons not parties.

Persons who are not parties to a decree are not bound by it, and ordinarily therefore a sale in execution of a decree does not operate to pass the property of any person who is not bound by the decree. A Court has no jurisdiction to sell the property of persons who are not parties to the proceedings or properly represented on the record. As against such persons decree and sales would be a nullity and might be disregarded without any proceedings being taken to set them aside. (Lindsay, J.C.). JADUNATH SINGH v. MST. AFZAL KHANAM. 8 O.L.J. 191=A.I.R. 1921 Oudh 150.

—Certificate.

———Rights of parties to sale are determined by certificate of sale.

The rights of the parties to the sale proceedings are determined by the certificate of sale, which finally vests the property in the auction-purchaser, and subject to any mistakes in the certificate of sale, which it is always open to the Court or officer granting the certificate of sale to correct, the title so acquired cannot be afterwards disturbed in any subsequent proceeding at the instance of any person who was a party to the confirmation of the sale. EXECUTION SALE—Certificate.

———The sale certificate is not essential for the reaction of the title in the auction-purchaser. It is merely a piece of evidence. So, adverse possession against an auction purchaser begins at least from confirmation of sale. (Wazir Hasan, J.C. and Neave, A. J. C.). MT. MAHMUD-UN-NISSA v. SYED LAHID RAZA. 84 I.C. 98=11 O.L.J. 466= A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 20.

———Ambiguity.

—Confirmation of.

———Private satisfaction of decree after sale but before confirmation—Practice explained.

A private satisfaction of a decree certified in Court after the sale of immovable property has been held and before the confirmation of the sale is ordered, does extinguish the decree and prevent the Court from confirming the sale in favour of the auction-purchaser, if he be the decree-holder himself; but it does not extinguish the decree and prevent the Court from confirming the sale, where a third person has purchased the property bona fide at the auction sale: 10 All. 166 (P.C.,) Appl.; A.I.R. 1928 Nag. 43, Not appr.; 10 All. 88; 35 Bom. 516, Dist.; A. ———Parties to decree settling their claim before confirmation.

Where the judgment-debtor and the decree-holder come to a settlement before the sale has been confirmed, there is no decree left capable of execution and executing Court is functus officio and cannot thereafter confirm the sale. The position would be very different if the sale has been confirmed and the parties to the decree come to a settlement while legal proceedings for the reversal of the order of confirmation are in progress; S. ———Court sale is not complete until confirmation.

When a Court sale takes place, the sale in favour of a particular individual is not complete unless and until it receives the confirmation of the Courts. It is the acceptance of the Court that constitutes the contract. When the person asserts that the Court-officer had power to bind the Court by his acceptance of a bid, he must prove his contention. The mere fact that in the published conditions of sale there is no statement to the effect that it is subject to the confirmation of the Court cannot be treated as implying that the Court had renounced its power of confirming the sale before it could take effect. Though the decree-holder purchaser is unable to obtain possession that would not entitle him to take out further execution for that portion of his purchase-money which is represented by the property puchased by him. ———Sale in purchase by decree-holders in lieu of decretal amount—One judgment-debtor entitled to interest in decretal amount—Conduct of parties showing purchase was only for benefit of decree-holders—Judgment-debtor is not entitled to any interest in the property.

It cannot be disputed that as a general proposition of law if only one of several decree-holders purchases the property at auction in lieu of the decretal amount, the purchase, in the absence of anything positive to the contrary, must be deemed to have been made on behalf of all the interested decree-holders: 37 All. 545, Foll.

But where a judgment-debtor is interested in the decretal amount he need not necessarily be entitled to any interest in the property purchased by the decree-holders. Even if it be conceded that ordinarily if the purchase is made by the decree-holder in lieu of the decretal amount and the payment is merely set off against the decree, then it may be deemed that the purchase is made on behalf of all the persons interested in the decretal amount whether plaintiffs or defendants, the Court has to see whether that inference can be properly drawn in view of the conduct of both the parties throughout the proceedings in the particular case.

A co-mortgagee had refused to join in the mortgage suit brought by the other mortgagees and had not himself brought any suit within limitation on the basis of the original document which he retained in his possession and the suit had to be brought on the basis of a certified copy. Then he was made a defendant and was not allowed to be transposed as a plaintiff because he had some subsequent mortgages on the property and thus occupied a double capacity, namely of co-mortgagee as well as of subsequent mortgagee. When the decree was passed, permission was granted to the decree-

EXECUTION SALE—Setting aside—Fraud.

In cases of sale in execution of a decree obtained by fraud, where a stranger has purchased, the Court should determine, whether it will be in accordance with the principles of justice, equity and good conscience to set aside the sale. The Court has, in fact, to reconcile two conflicting principles. On the one hand, fraud is an extrinsic collateral act, which vitiates the most solemn proceedings of Courts of justice, and avoids all judicial acts, ecclesiastical and temporal. A Court of Equity will wrest property, fraudulently acquired, not only from the perpetrator of the fraud, but from his children and his children's children or, from any persons amongst whom he may have parcelled out the fruits of his fraud, and will restore it to those from whom it has been fraudulently abstracted. On the other hand, against a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice, the Court will not take the least step imaginable ; a purchase without notice for a valuable consideration is a bar to the jurisdiction of the Court. On the facts of each case, the Court has to determine which of these doctrines prevails. In the solution of the problem, we have to bear in mind that the protection given to the bona fide purchaser had its origin exclusively in equity and is based entirely upon the conception that a Court of Equity acts solely upon the conscience of litigant parties, by compelling the defendant to do what and only what in pro consientiae he is bound to do. If the relations between the two contestants standing before the Court are such that, in equity and good conscience, the plaintiff ought to obtain the aid which he asks, and the defendant ought to do or suffer what is demanded of him, then the Court will interfere and grant the relief ; if the relations are not of this character, then the Court will withhold its hand and will leave the parties where they stand. The protection given to the bona fide purchaser, therefore simply means that from the relations subsisting between the two parties, specially that which is involved in the innocent position of the purchaser, equity refuses to interfere and to aid the plaintiff in what he is seeking to obtain, because it would be unconscientious and inequitable to do so ; the Court will not, in such an event, aid either party agrinst the other. It does not determine the question of title between parties. It is in most cases available only by way of defence. It is a shield in the hands of a defendant, to protect him against the claim of his adversary. It means that equity will refuse to interfere to aid the plaintiff in his suit, because, under the circumstances of the case it would be unconscionable that the plaintiff should have what he seeks to obtain. It enforces no right, but simply refuses to interfere in the plaintiff's behalf. (Mookerjee and Rankin, JJ.). BIRESWAR GHOSH v. PANCHCOURI GHOSH. 74 I.C. 975=37 C.L.J. 145=27 C.W.N. 587=A. I. ———Material facts suppressed—Court has inherent power to refuse to confirm the sale.

The Court has an inherent power to refuse to allow the sale to be carried out if it is satisfied that the Court has been misled either in giving leave to bid or in fixing the reserve price. In order to show that the Court has been misled it is necessary to show either actual mis-statements to the Court or non-disclosure to the Court of relevant facts unknown to the Court and which there was a duty to bring before the Court. Where the decree-holder put in an affidavit of which the tenor was that it was very doubtful whether the judgmentdebtor had any interest in the property at all which was proposed to be sold, that they had claims to it which were subject to litigation and the outcome of the litigation, like most litigation, was uncertain, and that it was impossible, therefore to give any idea of the market value, and further added that the market value of the lot in question might be fixed at Rs. 3,000, but suppressed a fact well known to him, namely, that the property, in respect of which the judgment-debtors claimed and had since been held by the Court to have, a two thirds interest, had been put up for sale, by the Court before and that the Court had fixed Rs. 45,000 as the reserve price and a bid of Rs. 36,000 had been refused on the ground that it was not great enough.

Held, that there were all the elements necessary for the Court to act on its inherent powers and that the confirmation of sale was rightly refused. A sale held in ignorance of the order for stay passed by an appellate Court is without jurisdiction and must be set aside. The former takes effect from the time of its pronouncement and its communication is only needed to make it known to the Court which is directed to carry it out. Its force is not suspended till it is formally communicated to the Court concerned. An injunction is however binding on the party to whom it is issued from the time it is communicated for there can be no attempt unless the party concerned knows what he is required to do or to abstain from doing and a Court cannot punish a man for doing what he did not know he was forbidden to do. Though mere irregularities of procedure in obtaining the decree or in execution thereof do not afford a sufficient ground for setting aside sales in execution, yet where the Court has no jurisdiction to sell the property in suit the sale is void ab initio. Persons who are not parties to a decree are not bound by it and ordinarily, therefore, a sale in execution of a decree does not operate to pass the property against any person who is not bound by the decree. (8 O.L J. 191, Foll.). A Court has no jurisdiction to sell the property of persons who are not parties to the proceedings or properly represented on the record. ———Sale without notice under O. 21, R. 22 may be nullity but without notice to legal representative of J—D dying just before actual sale is not a nullity—(Case-law discussed.)

If any order is passed by an executing Court against a party without notice being given to him of the application which gave rise to the proceedings the party behind whose back such proceedings are taken, will not be bound by the order. Further, if process is issued without the notice, which O. 21, R. 22 prescribes in cases where the judgment-debtor is dead or the decree is more than one year old, the want of notice might constitute a material irregularity entitling a person whose interests have been affected to apply either under O. 21, R. 90 or by suit to have any sale of property that has been held upon the decree-holder's application set aside. But if the decree-holder has done all that the law requires him to do and if the judgment-debtor or one of the several judgment-debtors, where there are more than one, happens to die during the course of the execution of the sale warrants or it may be while the auctioneer is actually holding the auction, the sale is not invalidated by the accident of the owner's death before the sale is completed: 22 M. 119 ; 26 M. EXECUTION SALE—Validity of.

A decree once passed does not become barred or incapable of being executed by reason of the death of a judgment-debtor, nor do execution proceedings abate owing to the failure of the decree-holder to bring the legal representatives of a judgment-debtor on the record O. 21 R. 22 is the only provision which deals with legal representatives of parties to decrees and that only applies to the commencement of execution proceedings. The legal representatives of judgment-debtors who die during the course of processes of Court being executed are able to watch public sales without being personally served with notice. When the law only prescribes the issue of notice to them at the commencement of execution proceedings, they cannot claim as a matter of right to have fresh notice, if their representation of the deceased's estate commences during the progress of the carrying out of the processes of the Court, nor are they justified in treating such processes as invalid for want of jurisdiction on the part of the Court and its officers. ———Irregularity in attachment does not nullify sale.

When sale has been duly held, without material irregularity or fraud, it cannot be considered a nullity merely by reason of flaw in the attachment or even the entire absence of an attachment. Similarly an attachment which was duly made in all except some minor detail of which the judgment-debtor had no knowledge at all, must be considered a valid attachment for all purposes. Even if the order of attachment was not subsequently posted in the Collector's office, that will not in any way invalidate or affect the attachment. (Hallifax, A.J.C.). An executor as such is the owner of the properties of the testator and holds these properties in the right of the testator and not in the right of the beneficiaries. The result is that in all the cases coming within the Hindu Wills Act or the Probate Act the executor or the administrator as such is the legal representative of the deceased and statutory owner of property except such as would otherwise have passed by survivorship to some other person. The residuary legatee does not become proprietor until after the administration has been completed and his interest thus ascertained. This interest is subject to the payment of debts and legacies and the discharge of other trusts contained in the will. No doubt he is beneficially interested in the estate subject to these payments and the discharge of these trusts; but he is not proprietor except when a residue has been ascertained, which on completion of administration is made over to him by the executor. A putni was sold in execution of money decree against a putnidar testator. The executor appointed by the testator putnidar under the will, purchased it with assets that came into his hands on the death of the testator. The proprietor of the zamindari under which the putni in question was held brought a suit for recovery of arrears of rent due to default in payment of the same for years 1328 and 1329 B.S. The proprietors had already purchased the putni at a sale held under Regn. 8 of 1819, for arrears of rent for 1330 B.S. So he could not execute the rent decree by sale of putni and was therefore compelled to execute it against the assets. During the period for which the rent was claimed the estate was under the management of executorship but the executor was discharged before the institution of the suit. It was contended that the heirs of the testator were not liable for rent as the rent for which the suit was instituted accrued due during the period when the estate was under the management of the executor and as the putni was already sold the executor was personally liable. It was not shown that the putni did not bring any income during the period when it was in possession of executor,

Held, (i) that the executor was entitled to be indemnified out of the testator's estate against the liabilities which he had properly incurred and (ii) that the proprietor with whom the executor had contracted to pay rent stood in the shoe of executor and would have the same indemnity as the executor had against the testator's estate and could realise his dues out of the assets of the testator. Raybold v. Turner, 1 Ch. 199 and Dowse v. Gorton, (1891) A.C. 190, Ref. (Jack and Mitter, JJ.). —S. 5—Rules under—R. 138—Liability.

———Servant of licensed master manufacturing gunpowder in master's house without latter's knowledge or consent—Master is liable for servant's act.

The accused held a license under the Indian Explosives Act to manufacture gunpowder. One of the conditions of the license was that the explosive shall be manufactured in a tent or lightly constructed building exclusively appropriated for the purpose and separated from any dwelling house. The accused constructed a building outside the village, which complied with this condition, and employed a woman who used to work exclusively in this building. One day the woman with her assistant went with ingredients for manufacturing gunpowder to the house of the accused in the village, and performed part of the process of manufacture there with pestles having iron rings without the knowledge of their master and while he was engaged elsewhere. During the process of manufacture there was explosion and the woman was killed and her assistant was injured,

Held, (Per Fawcett and Crump, JJ. contra Shah, J.)—that the act of the woman, though unauthorized, was one within the scope of her employment and the accused, her master, would be liable for her wrongful act. The East Indian possessions of France are not a "Foreign State" and Chap. II of the Indian Extradition Act of 1903 do not apply to those possessions. Extradition in such cases is governed by the treaty of 1815 between Great Britain and France. Article (ix) of the treaty of 1815 remains unaffected by Art. (xvi) of the treaty of 1876 and a British Indian subject may on requisition by the Governor of Pondicherry for instance be surrendered for the offence of theft committed therein without any preliminary procedure being adopted. The treaty of 1815 having provided that the surrender ———Order of District or Chief Presidency Magistrate executing warrant under S. 7 can be revised.

Execution by the District Magistrate (or the Chief Presidency Magistrate) in British India of a warrant under S. 7 of Extradition Act is not an executive act. The Magistrate has judicially to consider the matter and decide whether the warrant can be executed according to law and the order of the Magistrate is subject to the revisional powers of the High Court. The order can also be interfered with under S. 561-A. On proper proceedings being taken High Court can also interfere under S. 491 : 42 Cal. 793, held too widely stated; 7 Bom. ———Absconding from jail in Nepal State—Extradition warrant sent by British Envoy at Nepal to District Magistrate in British India is without jurisdiction and cannot be acted upon by Magistrate—High Court can interfere with order of Magistrate.

Absconding from jail is not one of the offences mentioned in first Schedule. Therefore S. 7 has no application at all to a warrant issued by the British Envoy at the Court of Nepal for the arrest of a person who has absconded from a jail in Nepal and has come into Br. India. Such a warrant is without jurisdiction. Section 10 of the Act could only apply, if the warrant is wholly illegal and without jurisdiction. Therefore the arrest is without any authority.

Section 15 of the Act empowers the Government of India and the Local Government to stay any proceedings taken under Chapter III of the Act and to direct any warrant to be cancelled and the person arrested to be discharged. But that does not necessarily oust the jurisdiction of High Court to interfere in a case where the action under the Act has not been taken under a valid warrant. This section ousts the jurisdiction of High Court to inquire into the propriety of the warrant but leaves open the question of High Court's power to interfere with a Magistrate's action, if it was proved that such action was consequent upon a warrant issued by a Political Agent which was plainly illegal. The procedure for requisitioning the surrender of any person accused of having committed any offence not necessarily an extradition crime is laid down in S. 9 of the Act but the requisition of such a case has to be made "to the Government of India or to any Local Government". Where no such requisition is made the warrant addressed to the Dt. Magistrate cannot possibly be supported under S. 9. (41 C. 400 ; 18 C. W. N. 869; 14 Cr. L. J. 673). If the treaty between British and Nepal Governments prohibits extradition for offences not specified therein, such prohibition overrides the provisions of the schedule by virtue of S. 18, but there is no such prohibition in the Treaty and therefore S. 9 does not in any way derogate from the provision of the Treaty. The Act practically enhances the power of the Nepal Government to requisition the authorities in the British territories to arrest and deliver fugitive offenders of their territory : 39 C. 164; 7 Bom. There is no derogation of the rights of the parties to the treaty by allowing one Government with the consent of the other to obtain extradition of a criminal who has committed an offence not mentioned in the treaty. A Government or a State is entitled if it so wishes, to hand over persons subject to the law of another State at the request of that State. In such a case there is no derogation to the Sovereign rights of either power. The duty to inform the authority under the Factories Act under S. 34 is laid on the manager. ———The structure of S. 42, Factories Act, indicates that one proceeding is split up into two proceedings and while the manager or occupier is accused of having committed an offence under the Act, he is also a complainant on his complaint against the other person or persons he has brought in. —Arbitration.

———Award in favour of person not party to reference—Binding nature of.

The co-heirs of a Mahomedan referred the division of the properties to arbitration. One of the co-heirs requested that some of the properties falling to his share must be awarded to his minor son who was not a party to the submission and the properties were likewise awarded to him:

FAMILY ARRANGEMENT—Consideration.

Held, that a family arrangement was the result and that the benefit of the award could be claimed by the minor though he himself was no party to the submission to the arbitration, and that the minor acquired title to the properties. (Devadoss, J.). DADA SAHIB v. GAJRAJ SINGH.
85 I.C. 258=20 M.L.W. 854= A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 204=47 M.L.J. 928.

———Award—Enforceability as family arrangement.

Where one party to the award led another to believe to his prejudice that he is going to abide by the award he is estopped from contesting it. The fact that he signed the award does not however by itself render it more binding on him: 6 C. P. L. R. 95, Foll. It has always been the policy of Courts of equity to uphold family settlements, even when they are not in legal form: 43 All. 1 and 42 Cal. 801, Foll. (Baker, Offg. J. C.). CHOWDHURI MANOHARLAL v. MT. AMANO.
77 I.C. 41=A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 14.

———Award and family arrangement—Validity—Principles underlying.

The principles under which the validity of an arbitration should be judged are more rigid than those which apply when a family agreement is under consideration. There is ample authority indicating that in some instances in which, although as an arbitration proceeding the result of an award cannot be supported, it is still capable of support on the ground, that the award represented what is in effect the outcome of a family compromise. Even assuming that much greater latitude may be extended to the support of a family arrangement than is the case in maintaining an award under an arbitration, nevertheless, where a reversionary interest is in fact affected by a family arrangement, such a compromise cannot be supported. Much more so when the reversionary interest is that of a minor. Case-law discussed. (Bucknill and Ross, JJ.). RAM BAHADUR SEN v. MAHANTH GANESH BHAGAT. 73 I.C. 542=2 Pat. 554= 5 P.L.T. 255= A. —By limited owner.

———The circumstance that a party to a settlement was a limited owner at the time would not make it any the less binding if the other requisites of validity of the settlement are present. (Mukerji and Bose, JJ.). KHANTA MOYEE DEBI v. HRIDAYANANDA BHATTACHARJEE.

—Consideration.

———Converting an expectancy into certainty and avoiding chance of litigation in future is good consideration for family arrangement. (Mukerji and Bennet, JJ.). POKHAR SINGH v. MT. DULARI KUNWAR. A. I. R. 1930 All. 687.

———A family arrangement may be executed to avoid future disputes even if they have not already arisen. (Ashworth, J.). RAMESHWAR RAI v. SHEOPAL RAI. 117 I.C. 822 (All.)

———Claims adjudged and disputes settled is sufficient consideration for upholding the family settlement.

FAMILY ARRANGEMENT—Consideration.

———It is a wrong principle of law to test the validity of the agreement by having recourse to the expedient of finding out whether the claims of the parties to the agreement were good. The true test is whether the parties had laid any claim against each other and whether those claims had been settled by virtue of the agreement termed the "family settlement." If a settlement was arrived at, the strength or validity of the claims of the parties has nothing to do with the validity of the family settlement. The fact that the claims of the parties had been adjudged and that the disputes between them had been settled would amount to a sufficient consideration for the upholding of the family settlement: A. I. R. 1927 Oudh 572, Appr. and Foll. (Misra and Nanavutty, JJ.). SITAL SINGH v. GAJINDRA BAHADUR SINGH.
116 I.C. 59=4 Luck. 57=5 O.W.N. 1022=
A. I. R. 1929 Oudh 373.

———Active contest is not necessary.

Although at the time when a family settlement is made there was no active contest, still the mere fact that at that time the parties agreed among themselves that they would not dispute each other's claims in respect of certain property is sufficient to establish the fact that a valid and binding family settlement took place between them: A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 572, Expl. (Wazir Hasan, Ag. C.J. and Pullan, J.). BALBHADDAR SINGH v. SHAMSHER SINGH. 115 I.C. 197=6 O.W.N. 109=
A. I. R. 1929 Oudh 305.

———Avoiding possible or anticipated dispute is sufficient consideration.

In order to have a valid family settlement it is not necessary that there must be a dispute in existence at the time when such settlement is arrived at. It may be that the members of the family may anticipate disputes likely to arise thereafter and if in order to prevent the arising of such disputes and to secure peace and happiness in the family they arrive at a settlement among themselves, the settlement arrived at must be deemed to be valid: 22 O.C. 300, Foll. (Misra and Srivastava, JJ.). AMEER HASAN v. MD. EJAZ HUSAIN. 117 I.C. 456=6 O.W.N. 51=
A. I. R. 1929 Oudh 134.

———The family arrangement or settlement is ordinarily resorted to in the interests of the whole family when recourse to it is essential to protect the family property from the extravagance of a particular member of the family, or to make a suitable provision for a female member of the family: 6 All. 560 (P.C.), Ref. (Kolhatkar, A.J.C.). MAHADEO v. GANESHRAM. 113 I.C. 373=
A. I. R. 1928 Nag. 308.

———Pending litigation or prospects thereof are not necessary.

It is not necessary that there should be a pending litigation or a prospective litigation in order that an arrangement may be considered a good family arrangement. The principle underlying the family arrangement extends not merely to cases in which arrangements are made between members of a family for the preservation of its peace, but to cases in which arrangements are made between them for the preservation of its property: Williams v. Williams, (1867) 2 Ch. A. 294, Foll. (Devadoss, J.). SADASIVAM PILLAI v. SHANMUGAM PILLAI. 98 I.C. 268=25 M.L.W. 119=
A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 126.

———Bona fide claim.

If there is a bona fide claim by a member of the family to the property in dispute, although it might turn out in the end that there was no substance in it, an arrangement come to by all the members of the family to settle that claim is a valid arrangement and will be binding upon all the parties concerned: A.I.R. 1921 Pat. 260; A.I.R. 1924 Pat. 736 and 33 All. 356 (P. C.), Foll. (Ross and Kulwant Sahay, JJ). GAJADHAR PRASAD v. LACHUMAN LAL SAHU. 103 I.C. 354=
8 P.L.T. 759=A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 339.

FAMILY ARRANGEMENT—Construction of.

———A family arrangement requires some consideration and under the guise of a family arrangement a party cannot enter into a transaction which he is not under the law competent to do and which may be beyond his disposing power.

Where a Hindu widow gave away part of her husband's estate to the presumptive reversioner,

Held, that in the circumstances the gift could not be supported as a family arrangement. (Suhrawardy and Cuming, JJ.). INDRA NARAIN MANNA v. SARBASOVA DASI. 87 I.C. 930=41 C.L.J. 341=
A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 743.

———Compromise of disputed claims.

Wherever doubts and disputes have arisen with regard to the rights of the different members of the same family, and fair compromises have been entered into to preserve the harmony and affection, or to save the honour of the family, those compromises will be sustained by the Court, although, perhaps, resting upon grounds which would not have been considered satisfactory if the transaction had occurred between strangers. But it must be established that the right compromised could at least have formed the subject-matter of a claim though a doubtful claim. (Das and Adami, JJ.). BHAGWATI KOER v JAGDAM SAHAY.
62 I.C. 933=2 P.L.T. 471=6 P.L.J. 604=

—Construction of.

———Deed must be construed as a whole.

Deeds of family settlement are of a nature peculiarly their own and the rule of interpretation which would be applicable to pure deeds of transfer cannot be permitted to be applied in the case of such deeds. The deed of family settlement must be read as a whole and the intention of the parties must be gathered from the various provisions contained therein and such intention should be respected. (Stuart, C.J. and Gokaran Nath Misra, J.). AHMAD AZIM v. SHAFI JAN. 97 I.C. 897=
2 Luck. 335=3 O.W.N. Sup. 102=
A.I.R. 1926 Oudh 561.

———In the case of family settlements, conditions may be inserted therein, which would not be valid in the case of ordinary deeds, under the ordinary law, but such conditions in the deed would be valid and enforceable, when forming a part of such family settlement: (Case law cited.)

Under a family settlement a talukdar granted some villages to his brothers in lieu of maintenance and in the deed of settlement it was stated that the villages given to each of the brothers were to be given to them in perpetuity for ever, generation after generation with proprietary powers. The words used in the vernacular being "waste dawam wa hamesha ka naslan bad naslan batnan wa batnan bad batnan ba akhtilar malikana". It was further laid down that if no male issue was born to a Guzaradar then the female issue would be allowed maintenance, and the widow of Guzaradar was to remain in possession of the entire property, without power of alienation during her lifetime, and after her death the property was to be divided among the surviving brothers,

FAMILY ARRANGEMENT—Effect.

Held, that the words "naslan bad naslan" and "batnan bad batnan" indicated an idea not to make a guzara resumable after the death of the particular grantee but to make it heritable and heritable only by the lineal male descendants, and such male lineal descendants would be covered by the expressions " naslan " (progeny) and " batnan " (womb).

The estate conferred upon each of the brothers was an estate in its inception of an absolute character, but heritable only by the male lineal descendants of the grantee and by his widow for her lifetime in case there was no such descendant, and descendible to his surviving brothers after the death of the widow. ——The essence of a family arrangement lies in an adjustment of conflicting claim bona fide made and recognized on both sides with the laudable object of putting an end to a controversy. If it were permissible to raise and to obtain a trial of the issue as to title in a subsequent litigation and obtain a finding thereon and then to determine in favour of the validity of the arrangement if it falls in line with the finding no compromises will hold good in the end : A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 97, Foll. (Stuart, C.J. and Wazir Hasan, J.). Rep. 82; L.R.I.A. 157 (P.C.) and 33 All. 356 (P.C.), Foll.

Where settlement creates no title by transfer in favour of any one of the parties to it, but the interest which the persons obtain under the terms of the settlement is in virtue of the recognition of the antecedent claim of each by the other or others, and where one of the parties has founded his claim on his right to succeed by inheritance under an alleged rule of custom, his land is " inherited " within the meaning of Oudh Civil Digest, para 179 (a). FAMILY ARRANGEMENT—Essentials and test.

———Where the several conditions of the deed of settlement constitute elements of consideration moving from one party towards another and thereby resulting in the entire settlement, and where the compromise intends to, and does as a matter of fact, settle the disputes amongst the several members of the family, it must be held that every one of the parties to the compromise is bound to fulfil the obligations which he undertakes to do in regard to any other party to the same settlement. They are not only bound to do so, but that they cannot be permitted to do otherwise: 40 All. 487 (P.C.), Ref. (Wazir Hasan, A.J.C.). —Essentials and test.

———For a family arrangement to be good it is not necessary that there should be a family dispute which has to be settled or composed. A family arrangement to be good need not necessarily be a " Compromise of doubtful rights." Williams v. Williams, (1867) 2 Ch. 294, Foll. (Mukerji and Bennet, JJ.). POKHAR SINGH v. MT. ———Existence of dispute in praesenti is not necessary but doubtful claim is essential.

The existence of a doubtful claim is essential for a family settlement but the existence of a dispute or controversy in praesenti is not, and a family settlement may be supported on the ground of maintaining peace and goodwill amongst the members or the family, for the preservation of the family honour or of the family property and for the avoidance of disputes and litigation in future. (Sen and Niamatullah, JJ.). RAGHUBIR v. NARAIN. A.I.R. 1930 All 498.

———For a compromise to be binding it is necessary that the parties should have been parties to the compromise or should claim under or through such parties or should have acted on it or derived some benefit under it. Further the parties to the compromise should bona fide consider that there is a question to be decided between them, for no compromise would be good if it ultimately turned out that there was no doubt upon the point which was made the subject of the compromise, and again it must be an honest settlement of an existing dispute which must not be manifestly ultra vires of the parties to settle : 2 M.I.A. 181 (P.C.); 13 M.I.A. 497 (P.C.); 7 M.I.A. 311 (P.C.); 14 M.I.A. 24 (P.C.); 20 Cal. 373 (P.C.); 26 Cal. 81 (P.C.) and 33 All. 356 (P.C.), Ref. (Mukerji and Bose, J.). ———It is the object and purpose of a transaction which determines whether it has the character of a family arrangement or settlement. That character is not determined by the mere fact of its being consented to by the other members of the family. (Kolhatkar, A.J.C.). MAHADEO v. GANESHRAM. 113 I.C. 373=A. I. FAMILY ARRANGEMENT—Essentials and test.

———Where a family arrangement had been fairly entered into without concealment or imposition on either side, with no suppression of what is true or suggestion of what is false, although the parties might have greatly misunderstood the situation and mistaken their rights, it will be upheld: 10 C.L.J. 503. Foll. (Devadoss, J.). SADASIVAM PILLAI v. SHANMUGAM PILLAI. 98 I.C. 268= 25 M.L.W. 119=A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 126.

———In considering the question as to whether a deed of family arrangement is a valid deed, one has to consider the benefit to the family as a whole and not to the individual members thereof. ———The test of a family arrangement is that it constitutes the recognition of a pre-existing title and not that the parties derive any title from each other. There might be a withdrawal of any gratuitous admission, unless there is some obligation not to withdraw it and a mere consent to the entry of the name of another in the revenue papers does not create any such obligation: 1 O.L.J. 81, Ref. (Raza, J.). ———A family arrangement cannot be effected by mere conduct, apart from any explicit agreement. A bona fide dispute is also essential. (Wazir Hasan and Ashworth, A.J.Cs). AMJAD KHAN v. ASHRAF KHAN. 87 I.C. 445=2 O.W.N. 83= 28 O.C. 265=A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 568.

———A family arrangement to be operative must be without fraud. It would not be supported if founded in mistake of either party to which the opposite party was accessory or if either party has been misled by the concealment of material things; for the essence of the matter is mutual communication of all relevant circumstances. ———Parties must belong to same family.

Per Lindsay, J.—Family arrangements are arrangements arrived at by members of the same family in settlement of doubtful claims, cases in which, there being uncertainty as to the rights of the various claimants, the dispute is composed by a settlement based upon the acknowledgment of pre-existing title in the parties concerned. There must be a dispute, the parties must belong to the same family, and the property which constitutes the subject-matter of the dispute must be the property of the family to which the parties belong. An arrangement made by a Hindu widow with the person whom she is going to adopt, before the adoption, is not a family arrangement. (Lindsay and Mukerjee, JJ.). —Setting aside.

———A family arrangement stands on a different footing from an ordinary contract. A settlement of doubtful claims or rather what the parties believed to be doubtful claims, without the worry and expense of litigation might itself be sufficient consideration for such an arrangement. The fact that there is no other consideration to support the arrangement or that it transfers the property to a person without any right, is not a sufficient ground for setting it aside: 8 Cal. 138, Rel. on. (Bhide, J.). ———If there is a dispute and if all the members of the family come to an arrangement it will not be open to any of the parties to go behind such an arrangement, but where a father and sons amicably arranged that the father should settle all the properties upon the sons reserving to himself little or nothing, it cannot be said that the essentials of a family arrangement are present which would preclude any of the parties from claiming by inheritance to any other of the parties to such an arrangement. In order to make out a valid family settlement by which a person could relinquish his right to property not only in praesenti but also in futuro, there must be in the first place consideration for such relinquishment : in the second place there must be words which would convey such an expression of intention on the part of any of the parties to the document. So long as the arrangement is merely a one sided arrangement or where there is no dispute to be settled, a mere settlement of property by one upon another cannot be considered to be a family arrangement under which it can be said that certain rights which would accrue in future have been given up. —S. 1—Amount.

———Length of life and value to plaintiffs determine the estimate.

The amount awarded must not be equivalent for the loss but some reasonable sum. In awarding damages for prospective loss of income or other earnings, the Courts ought not to give the plaintiff such a sum as, if invested, would produce the full amount of income which he would probably have earned but ought to take into account the accidents of life and other matters and to give the plaintiff what they consider under all the circumstances a fair compensation for his loss. The proper way of finding out the financial loss to the plaintiff is to form some estimate of what the value of the continued life of the deceased would have been to the plaintiff and how long it was probable that it would continue: A. ———Value of life depends on the earning capacity of the deceased—High Court need not interfere if the amount awarded is sufficient protection.

It is difficult to lay down any general rule regulating the award of damages in cases under the Act. In each case the circumstances may differ, and these circumstances must necessarily regulate the amount to which a party might be entitled, or measure the loss which that party has suffered by the death of the person concerned.

Where a person loses his life as a result of an accident, the value of his life does not depend on the number of his dependants but on his earning capacity. The larger the number of dependants in a family, the greater is the value of the life of the person supporting them; but the loss which they suffer by his death can be measured by his earning capacity, of which the family was enjoying the benefit, and the care, attention and support which were to be reasonably expected from him had he been alive: A.I.R. 1922 Cal. 317, Foll.

When the dependants are sufficiently protected by the amount awarded to them, High Court need not interfere. (Kanhaiya Lal and Ashworth, JJ.). G. I. P. RY. Co. v. MT. JANKI BAI. 96 I.C. 681=A.I.R. 1926 All. 703.

———The widow and son of the deceased can recover damages for the loss of the contribution made by the deceased towards the joint income of the family. Legal liability alone is not the test of injury in respect of which damages may be recovered under the Act, but the reasonable expectation of pecuniary advantage by the relatives remaining alive may be taken into account and damages given in respect of that expectation, if it be disappointed. and the probable pecuniary loss thereby occasioned (112 P.R. 1913, Ref.) and the fact that the deceased provoked the quarrel in the course of which he was killed does not disentitle his relatives from recovering damages. —S. 7—Calculation of super-tax.

———Unregistered firm converted into a limited company on 1st April, 1925—Rate of super-tax.

The Western India Turf Club was converted into a Limited Company by being registered under Companies Act as a Company limited by guarantee. For the financial year 1925-26 it was called upon to put in a return of income for the previous year, namely, 1924-25. It accordingly put in its return of income showing the income earned by the Club as an unregistered firm during the previous year 1924-1925, when the Company was not in existence. For the purposes of assessment, the Income-tax Officer determined the total income to be Rs. 15,03,522 under S. 23 (1) of the Act, and calculated super-tax thereon at Rs. 4,59,153 by applying to it the scale rates applicable to an unregistered firm, Held, that the Company is liable to be assessed at the rate of one anna in the rupee for super-tax in respect of the excess over Rs. 50,000 of total income of the Turf Club for the previous year: A.I.R. 1925 All. 535, Expl. and Dist. (*Macleod, C. FISHERY—Essentials for establishing right.

—Essentials for establishing right.

———It is not absolutely essential to prove an express grant after a considerable lapse of time and the plaintiffs can establish their right by proof of an uninterrupted user of fishery prior to their dispossession. The grantee of a fishery right in a river is entitled to fish in all waters comprised within the bank of the river and the circumstances that a particular sheet of water may during part of the year be disconnected from the flowing stream or permanent current, does not affect the rights of the grantee : a jalkar so situated in the river-bed is essentially part of the river and the fish contained therein may properly be deemed fish of the river: 18 C.L.J. 399 and 42 Cal. 489 (P. The term Jalkar is ambiguous. It may mean a grant of a right of fishery or it may mean the grant of a sheet of water together with the sub-soil. The question whether what was intended to be granted in a particular case was restricted to a right of fishery or included a grant of sheet of water together with the sub-soil must depend upon the construction of the original grant if available or must be determined with regard to the subsequent history of the property. —Navigable rivers.

———Right of fishing in—Extent of.

It was in the power of the Government in right of the Crown as successor to the East India Company to grant such exclusive right of fishing in a navigable water. Since about 1860 the policy of making such grants has been greatly doubted. But such grants were not uncommon in Bengal in earlier times and if proved, they are perfectly legal. Mere grants of rights to tolls are not rights of exclusive fishery. A mere mention in the Revenue documents, that certain classes of revenue are not being interfered with, is not to be construed as granting exclusive right in navigable waters if other adequate and sufficient meaning can be found for them. Prima facie public navigable rivers are publici juris and everybody has a right in India to fish in any navigable water—whether tidal or not. Per Ghosh, J.—"I entertain considerable doubt whether after the abolition of Sayer any Zemindar has got any right to levy tolls or taxes with regard

9 Pat. 401=A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 382.

—Permanent right.

———In order that there should be a permanent right of fishing it is necessary that there should be a grant or that it should be possible to hold that a grant was implied. Mere recording in the Government chitta that certain persons have been given settlement of fishing rights does not prove that there was a permanent grant, nor does it lead to the presumption of a lost grant. It should be shown that it was at least the practice of Government to give permanent leases of fishing rights. (Cammiade and S. K. Ghose, JJ.). —Transfer of right.

———Quebec Law—Right of fishing can be separately transferred.

The right to fishing accompanied with a right of way for the enjoyment of the former right is more than usufructuary in the older and stricter meaning. It is right to a separate subject or incident of property. There is no inherent reason for refusing to treat a fishing right as a self-contained and separable subject. In the seigniorial cases they were treated as self-contained and separable. In the law of Scotland, where the fee cannot be split up they are regarded as proper subjects for a separable title to property in fee. The definition of Art. 405 of the Quebec Code presents this analogy that it places no difficulty in the way of regarding the right of fishing as an item among others comprised in the subject-matter. There is no reason why, consistently with the language of Arts. 405, 406 and 408 of the Quebec Code there should not be ownership of a fishing right as a mode of enjoying and disposing of separable and physical subject for possession. The title to take the fish is a title to take a product of the river and Art. 408 recognizes as possible in law the union with it as an accessory of the right to use bed of the river or the banks when naturally or artificially stipulated for as part of that which is joined to the fishing right. FISHERY—Several Fishery.

—Several Fishery.

———Lost grant.

There are serious legal difficulties in accepting a contention that a right of several fishery had its origin in a lost grant by the Government to a certain unincorporated community who granted it to the men of certain localities, who lastly granted it to the parties in question. (Marten, J.). LAKSHMAN GOWROJI v. RAMJI ANTONE.

23 Bom. 939 = A.I.R. 1921 Bom. 93.

—Shifting river.

———Rights in.

In Bengal it is settled that the Government's grantee can follow the shifting river for the enjoyment of his exclusive fishery so long as the waters form part of the river system within the upstream and the downstream limits of his grant, whether the Government own the soil subjacent to such waters as being the long established bed, or whether the soil is still in a riparian proprietor as being the site of the river's recent encroachment: A. I. R. 1914 P. C. 48, Appl.

But there is no authority for the proposition that the grantee would not only enjoy the right of fishery in the bed of the tidal navigable river as granted, but would also retain the right of fishery on the land of another over which the river flowed for a short interval but ceased to do so, if there is a sheet of water on defendants' land which is connected with the river. 104 I.C. 494 = 46 C.L.J. 93 = A.I.R. 1927 Cal. 741.

—Stake fishing.

———Rights of the public.

Where stake fishing is an ordinary method of public fishing, acts which could be relied under English law to establish a several fishery may be attributed to the person's exercise of a public right. There would seem no reason why a man who has once planted his stakes and kept them in repair should ever be turned out during his life, nor why if, from illness or old age, he wanted to retire, he should not be able to substitute a relative or a friend in his place with or without payment before any other member of the public could intervene. Once it is granted that the public right of fishing in navigable waters on any coast may be exercised by stake fishing, it almost follows that quasi permanent rights may be obtained in particular spots. For there is no one entitled to eject the stakeholder, and in practice it would be difficult, if not impossible, to prevent him from transferring his rights to his relatives or friends. So where stake fishing is general, caution is necessary before one accepts the view that each Dar owner has a prescriptive right to a sheet of water and to affix his stakes in the sub-soil although he has no claim to the soil itself. Where it is not established that the acts in question are necessarily inconsistent with a public right of stake fishing, no prescriptive right to an exclusive right or several fishery can be held to be made out.

The stake fisherman may fix his stake as the sailor does his anchor or mooring buoy. Neither claims the soil for each is exercising a public right. The stake like the mooring buoy may belong to and be used by a particular man or a shipping Company. But all this does not involve an exclusive right to any particular waters. It is only because all persons having the like right, namely, the general public cannot all fish or anchor in the same spot that by a natural process different persons go to different spots and that in course of time a particular spot may be identified with a particular person.

FOREIGNERS ACT (1864), S. 2—Effect of transfer of territory.

The right of a member of the public who is entitled to fish in the sea by means of stakes would not pass by grant or descent. The right of the public to fish in the sea does not come within the description of property of any kind. On the other hand, the stake fisherman will be entitled to be protected from improper interference with his public right of fishing. The law is capable of compelling parties to exercise their common rights fairly towards each other, and not in a spirit of malice or rapacity. But though the right to fish may be public, the right to the stake is private and is a subject of property. If, therefore, the stakes were let out with covenants for repair, surrender and non-removal and possibly also with a covenant for compensation if by negligence the existing right to fish therefrom was lost, it would be questionable whether such an agreement could be successully attacked. (Case-law fully discussed). (Marten, J.). LAKSHMAN GOWROJI v. RAMJI ANTONE.

FOREIGNERS ACT (3 of 1864).

—S. 2—Effect of transfer of territory.

———Cession of territory by Britain to another state —British subject ceases to be such on cession.

A relinquishment of the Government of a territory is not only a relinquishment of the right to soil or territory, but also of the rights over the inhabitants of the country. The distinction between a right of election of which sovereign he will become the subject and the method by which a man can leave a newly ceded territory and remain within the allegiance of his former sovereign, seems somewhat fine: but the distinction is one between a mere assertion of elected allegiance and actual conduct clearly showing such an election. It is not enough for an inhabitant to assert, when the question arises, that he has elected to remain within the allegiance of his former sovereign; there must be conduct on his part, such as leaving the ceded territory and going to reside permanently in his former sovereign's dominions to indicate his previous election. Any inhabitant of the ceded or separated territory has not the right to remain an inhabitant of it, and at the same ———Words "any person claiming to be interested in the property" in S. 59—"So seized".

—S. 59—Interpretation.

The first canon of construction of a statute is that you must take the language as it stands and if it is clear, give effect to it. There is no possible ground for saying that the phrase "any person claiming to be interested in the property so seized" occurring in S. 59 could be construed as limited to the case contemplated by S. 57 when no mention is made of any such limitation, the language of the section is perfectly clear and unrestricted in its terms and must be given effect to accordingly. Apart from that, the words "so seized" logically and grammatically refer to the seizure under S. 52, which includes seizure of tools, boats, etc. (Pearson and Jack, JJ.). MEHER SARDAR v. EMPEROR.

—Benami transaction.

——Where in a suit for declaration that a certain alienation is invalid the plaintiff is merely a figure head and the real plaintiff is the alienor himself who has caused the suit to be instituted for undoing his own act, no declaratory decree should be passed: A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 24, Foll. (Findlay, J.C.). —By minor.

——In equity, if an infant be old enough to commit a fraud by inducing others to think that he is of age, he cannot take advantage of it, and, if the Court cannot restore the parties to their original footing, the infant will be bound as if he were an adult. But where the minor has not obtained any property by fraudulent misrepresentation and is merely asking to be put in the position which he occupied before the transaction, this rule will not apply.

FRAUD—Fraudulent decree.

It is a question of some difficulty to determine what constitutes a fraudulent misrepresentation by an infant; but it is well established that, allowing another person to deal with him as if he was an adult or doing acts which only an adult can properly do is not sufficient: Ex-parte Jones, (1881) L. R. 18 Ch. D. 109, Ref.

The representation must, in order to create the liability, be an express representation.

Where, therefore, a minor simply executes a vakalatnama and files a written statement without making any express representation that he is of age, that of itself does not amount to a fraudulent representation that he is of age.

Again, there may be a false representation which is not fraudulent; for untruth does not of itself import a dishonest mind. Proof of absence of the actual and honest belief is necessary; Derry v. Peck, 14 A. C. 337, Ref. (Das and Adami, JJ.). GANGANAND SINGH v. RAMESHWAR SINGH.

——Every fraud can't sustain suit to set aside decree got by fraud.

Many decrees are obtained by the fraud of the successful party which cannot be set aside by filing another suit and when the authorities are examined the difficulty, in laying down any principle to establish a distinction between frauds which if proved will enable the successful party to set aside a decree and those which will not support such a suit, is apparent.

Whenever a plaintiff or defendant obtains a decree by perjury the Court has been misled and not mistaken and the judgment so obtained can be impeached on the ground of fraud.

Where the Court was misled by the insolvent plaintiff who concealed his insolvency, in the suit for debt due prior to insolvency and where it was still open to the Official Assignee to sue him for the debt.

———Fraud vitiates any agreement entered into on dissolution of partnership.

An agreement entered into on a dissolution will be set aside if it can be shown to have been based upon error or to have been tainted by fraud, whether in the shape of positive misrepresentation or of concealment of the truth.

Held: that having regard to the fraud practised upon the sleeping partners as shown by the numerous instances of falsification of accounts by the working partners, the settlement was not binding upon the managing partners and that the promissory note was accordingly vitiated: 5 M.I.A. 872 (P.C.) and Law v. Law, (1905) 1 Ch. 140, Ref. (Ananthakrishna Ayyar, J.). ———Civil Court has jurisdiction to declare sale fraudulent and not binding on plaintiff.

A Civil Court has jurisdiction to make a declaration that a revenue sale is fraudulent and did not convey plaintiff a interest in the property. The sale has the appearance of a sale for arrears of revenue but is in its essence, a private alienation. A co-owner of land cannot be allowed to use the machinery of the Revenue Sale Law to defraud other co-owner, and if he does so the Civil Courts are competent to declare that the result of his conduct is not to place a fraudulent purchaser in a better position than a buyer at a private sale. —What is.

———Any and every act of the defendant which misleads the Court does not afford a cause of action to the plaintiff to found a separate suit for having a decree declared void. Thus if in the previous case the Court was misled into holding that the service of the summons by registered post was good service it would not by itself be sufficient to found a separate action on the ground of the fraud. The only remedy open to a party under such circumstances is to apply to the Court which passed the previous decree to set aside the ex parte decree under O. 9, R. 13, C. P. C. (*Rupchand, A. J. —S. 3 (52)—Signature.

———Bengal General Clauses Act, S. 3 (41)—"Signature"—Means writing name with the intention to authenticate the document.

Speaking generally a signature is the writing or otherwise affixing a person's name or a mark to represent his name, by himself or by his authority with the intention of authenticating a document as being that of or as binding on the person whose name or mark is so written or affixed. The insertion of the name, in any part of the writing, in a manner to authenticate the instrument is sufficient. Although the signature be in the beginning or middle of the instrument, it is binding as if at the foot of it. The question always is, whether the party, not having signed it regularly at the foot, yet meant to be bound by it as it stood, or whether it was left, so unsigned because he refused to complete it; but when it is ascertained that he meant to be bound by it as a complete contract, the signature is, for purposes of execution, effective. The Courts have gone so far as to hold that the name at the head of a telegram was sufficient. Some of the cases even hold that it matters not for what purpose the signature was put, if in fact it authenticates the document. But the primary rule is what where the name occurs in the document, not as authenticating the whole, but only for a particular purpose or only with reference to a part, it is not an effective signature. Johnson v. Dodgson, 2 M. & W. 653; 46 R. GHATWALI LAND REGULATION (BENGAL—29 of 1814).

—Ghatwal can be a mourashi mokararidar.

———A person may be a mourashi mokararidar and also a ghatwal. (1918 P.H.C.C. 305 and A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 5, Ref.). The distinction between a ghatwali within the regulation and ghatwali which is outside the regulation is that in the former case there is no tenure between the zamindar and the ghatwali who holds direct from the Government while in the latter the tenure exists. In the former case while the lands of the ghatwali are still deemed to be within the zamindari, the zamindar no longer pays the Government revenue for them and has therefore, no claim to the underground rights; his only right connected with these lands is to receive the difference between the rent paid by the ghatwal and the amount of the Government revenue which was assessed on this part of the zamindari; if the Government does not claim the mineral rights there is no one to whom they can belong but the ghatwal. But in the latter case the zamindar still pays the Government revenue on these lands and if the ghatwal claims the minerals he must show some transaction which grants him the minerals either expressly or by necessary implication. GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT (1915), S. 65—Scope.

—S. 49—Delegation of powers.

———When certain powers are given by statute to the Governor acting with the Ministers one of two things, must be clearly established, either that the power was, as a matter of fact, exercised only by the Governor with the Ministers or else that the power is notified as having been so exercised as to make it incapable of being called into question. The Government may, in the course of its administration of executive functions, delegate many things to subordinate officers. But no such delegation is proper or possible when the right, more especially in the nature of a discretion, is created and given by statute in a particular manner.

The requirement of R. 5 under the Madras City Municipal Act that the dispensing with shall be by the special order of the Governor with the Ministers must be strictly carried out. GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT (1915), S. 72—Emergency.

—S. 72—Emergency.

———Authority of the Governor-General—Finality of.

Per Broadway, J.—According to S. 72 of the Act it is the Governor-General, and Governor-General alone, who is concerned and the intention of the framers of the Act is to leave it to the Governor-General to decide, as a pure act of administration whether a state of emergency exists which calls for an Ordinance and that his decision on that point is final and not liable to consideration by the Courts although it is open to the Courts to decide whether, in making the Ordinance he has kept his terms within the provisions of the Act: De Verteuil v. Knaggs, (1918) A.C. 557, Rel. on.

Per Bhide, J.—The existence of an emergency and the purpose of an Ordinance can be looked into by a Court of law. If, however, there are circumstances which are reasonably capable of being looked upon as giving rise to an "emergency" the Court will not be justified in interfering even if it is inclined to take a different view on the facts, because legislature has invested the Governor-General with a discretion in very wide terms to exercise his powers under S. 72 and hence his decision is entitled to great weight. Although the provisions of the Ordinance have the effect of depriving the accused person of a right to be tried by a Sessions Judge aided by assessors and a right of appeal to the High Court, still as these rights are given by the Criminal Procedure Code which is only an Act of the Indian legislature it can be overridden by the Indian legislature the Governor-General-in-Council and the Governor-General acting by himself. GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT (1915), S. 80-A, Cl. (1)—Interpretation.

—S. 72-D, Rules under—R. 15—Finality of President's decision.

———Rule 15 does not exclude the jurisdiction of the High Court. It is a Rule by which the members of the Bengal Legislative Council are bound, and it means nothing more or less than this that when the President has given his decision on a point of his order, his decision is final, so far as the members of the Council are concerned, and that it cannot be questioned by anybody within the Council. The presence of the word "final" in R. 15 does not exclude jurisdiction of the High Court, nor does it conclude the matter. It is a word which is to be found in numerous statutes sometimes it has been held with reference to the context in which it appears that the word 'final' means final for all purposes, and excludes jurisdiction of the Courts; sometimes it has been held notwithstanding the existence of the word 'final' the jurisdiction of the Courts is not excluded. ———In Cl. Even assuming for the sake of argument that the "tour expenses" and the "travelling allowances" were not exempted from being submitted to the vote of the Council, the question cannot be raised before the High Court by reason of Cl. (4). (Dawson-Miller, C.J., Jwala Prasad and Bucknill, JJ.). KRISHNA BULLABH SAHAY v. GOVERNOR OF BIHAR & ORISSA. 96 I.C. 791=5 Pat. 595= 7 P.L.T. 695=A.I.R. 1926 Pat. 305 (F.B.).

—S. 80-A, Cl. (1)—Interpretation.

———Court of law is not competent to consider the merits of a particular enactment.

The words "for the peace and good Government" are used because they are words of the widest significance and it is not open to a Court of law to consider with regard to any particular piece of legislation whether in fact it is meritorious in the sense that it will conduce to peace or to good Government. They are words which are intended to give subject to the restrictions of the Act, a legislating power to the body which it invests with that authority. There is nothing in that expression which can be the foundation of any reasonable argument to the effect that the Criminal Law Amendment Act of 1925 was outside the jurisdiction of the local legislature. GOVERNMENT OF INDIA ACT (1915), S. 80-A, Cl. (4)—Interpretation.

—S. 80-A, Cl. (4)—Interpretation.

———"Affect"—Meaning of.

Clause 4 is doubtless wider than the mere provision that the local legislature shall not have power to repeal an Act of Parliament and the word "affect" may cover any interference with the will of Parliament as expressed in a statute. But what Cl. 4 of S. 80-A refers to and preserves from interference is the effect of an Act of Parliament by its own force as a determination of the will of Parliament with reference to a particular subject-matter. It may well be that it guards against any possibility that a local legislature might attempt to interfere with the operation of Acts of Parliament that do not technically extend to India. But it cannot be construed as meaning that because in 1726 when there was no other law, the Courts in Calcutta adopted the law that prevailed at home subject to many modifications, therefore any part of that law so introduced which originated in statute as distinct from common law cannot be interfered with by the local legislature. ———If Subordinate to the High Court.

Section 15, Charter Act Replace by S. 107, Government of India Act provides that every Court subject to the appellate jurisdiction of the High Court is subject to its power of superintendence. Reading these two provisions together every Civil Court of the Presidency is subject to the High Court's power of superintendence, in other words, is subordinate to that Court: 9 Cal. 295 (P.C.), Foll.

Revenue Courts, although so designated, on account of their more limited jurisdiction, are nevertheless, properly understood, Civil Courts.

The revenue officers having been by the very terms of the Act, constituted Courts, when hearing certain suits or applications, it is a necessary corollary, that the Board, governed as it is by the same rules of procedure, should also be deemed a Court when dealing with the same matters at a later stage.

It is wrong to assume that the Courts mentioned in S. 107 of the Government of India Act (S. 15 Charter Act) as being subject to the High Court's ———Criminal cases.

—S. 107—Inherent power.

It is now well settled that a High Court is competent, in the exercise of the power of superintendence vested in it under S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915 (which replaced S. 15 of the Indian High Courts Act, 1861) to set aside proceedings instituted without jurisdiction by a Subordinate Court under S. 145 of the Cr. P. Code; such power of superintendence can be exercised notwithstanding S. 435 (3), Cr. P. Code, which lays down that proceedings under Chapter XII (which comprises Ss. 145-148) are not proceedings within the meaning of that section. The High Court can, when it sets aside the proceedings, proceed to give such consequential directions as may be found necessary in the interests of justice in the circumstances of the particular case. Although the Criminal Procedure Code does not contain a provision corresponding to S. 151 of the C. P. Code, yet the inherent power of Courts is in no sense restricted in application to civil cases; it is equally applicable to criminal matters. The power is not capriciously or arbitrarily exercised; it is exercised ex debito justitiae to do that real and substantial justice for the administration of which alone Courts exist; but the Court, in the exercise of such inherent power, must be careful to see that its decision is based on sound general principles and is not in conflict with them or with the intentions of the Legislature as indicated in statutory provisions. Where in a dispute as to lac between tenants and zamindars it was manifestly impossible to restore the physical condition of things as they existed when the proceedings under S. 145 were instituted and where the title was in dispute and the Court was not in a position to make an assumption as to possession in favour of either party,

Held, that in such circumstances, the best course to adopt was to keep the property in the custody of the Court pending decision by a Civil Court on the question of title: 1 M.L.W. 1032; Hood Barrs v. Heriot, (1896) A.C. 174 and Peruvian Guano Co. v. Dreyfus Bros., (1892) A. ———Proceedings instituted without jurisdiction under Criminal P. C., S. 145—High Court has inherent power to set aside proceedings and pass consequential orders.

It is now well settled that a High Court is competent in the exercise of the power of superintendence vested in it under S. 107 of the Government of India Act, 1915 (which replaced S. 15 of the Indian High Courts Act, 1861) to set aside proceedings instituted without jurisdiction by a subordinate Court under S. 145 of the Cr. P. C. such power of superintendence can be exercised notwithstanding S. 435 (3), Cr. P. C., which lays down that proceedings under Chapter XII (which comprises Ss. 145-148) are not proceedings within the meaning of that section. The High Court can, when it sets aside the proceedings, proceed to give such consequential directions as may be found necessary in the interests of justice in the circumstances of the particular case. Although the Criminal Procedure Code does not contain a provision corresponding to S. 151 of the Civil P. C. yet the inherent power of Courts is in no sense restricted in application to civil cases: it is equally applicable to criminal matters. The power is not capriciously or arbitrarily exercised; it is exercised ex debito justitiae to do that real and substantial justice for the administration of which alone Courts exist: but the Court, in the exercise of such inherent power must be careful to see that its decision is based on sound general principles and is not in conflict with them or with the intentions of the Legislature as indicated in statutory provisions. Where in a dispute as to lac between tenants and zamindars it was manifestly impossible to restore the physical conditions of things as they existed when the proceedings under S. 145 were instituted and where the title was in dispute and the Court was not in a position to make an assumption as to possession in favour of either party.

Held, that in such circumstances the best course to adopt was to keep the property in the custody of the Court pending decision by a Civil Court on the question of title: 1 L. W. 1032; Hood Barrs v. Heriot, (1896) A. C. 174 and Peruvian Guno Co. v. Dreyfus Bros., (1892) A. —S. 107—Stay of criminal proceedings.

P.C.

On the general question of the stay of criminal proceedings when these, on the face of them, raise a question of fact which is still under adjudication by a Civil Court of competent jurisdiction, as for instance by the High Court as a Court of first appeal, the High Court need not stay the proceedings under S. 476, Criminal Procedure Code. When those proceedings are terminated and the prosecution is actually instituted, it will be open to the

Where Karnam Inam lands held by the husband were enfranchised by the Government in favour of the widow and daughter under the terms: "This inam being held for karnam service now otherwise provided for, will be subject to the payment of an annual quit rent of Rs. 11 which is hereby imposed upon it in commutation both of the service and the reversionary interest possessed by the Government in the inam. —Construction—Patta.

———Whether confers title—Distinction between cases where the Government is owner and cases where it is not owner.

In cases where Government is not the owner of the land, the mere issue of a patta in favour of a person does not operate in law to convey a title to the land in the pattadar to the prejudice of the real owner. The patta in such cases is only a memorandum of one extent of land and the Government assessment due thereon. It may be entitled to such weight as the Court thinks fit in the circumstances in considering whether the person in whose name the patta stood and who paid the Government revenue was in possession of the land; but as evidence of ownership of land a patta by the Government is per se of no real use. But as regards lands of which Government is the owner and which is at their absolute disposal either because it is assessed waste land, an escheated land or land resumed it is open to the Government to make a grant of such land to any person it thinks fit. In such cases, the order granting such land to such person has the effect of conveying to such person the title to the land subject to the payment of revenue. The grant itself may take the form of a patta.

GRANT—Construction—Permanency.

Held, on the facts, that the patta in question belonged to the latter category. (Ananthakrishna Aiyar, J.). SAMPATHU RAO v. APPASAMY NAINAR. 1930 M.W.N. 385.

—Construction—Permanency.

———Grant of tank for public purpose—Presumption is in favour of permanency.

Where in the case of a grant of land made for the excavation of a tank the evidence showed that there was scarcity of water in the village, and the original grantee undertook to remove the difficulty felt by the villagers, if land were granted to him in perpetuity, so that he might excavate a tank at considerable expense of money and the grant was made accordingly and the tank was excavated for public benefit.

Held, that according to Hindu religious notions, such grant of land for digging tank was supremely meritorious and in these circumstances, it is inconceivable that the grant could have been of a temporary character or that the landlord could ever have intended to resume the grant: 39 C. 439, Foll.; 46 C. 683 (P. —Construction—Personal grant.

———Head of religious institution—Grant to, in personal capacity.

Where the proprietary rights in certain lands are granted to a person by way of reward in recognition of his energy and zeal in looking after a sacred house and bringing the surrounding waste land into cultivation and not as the head or member of a religious institution, the grant is a personal one and the mere use of the word 'dharmarth' by the grantee's son with reference to the land, does not create any presumption that the land had been for any charitable or religious purpose. Even the head of a religious institution may hold and acquire property in his own right. (Broadway and Johnstone, JJ.). GURDWARA PRABANDHAK COMMITTEE v. SOHAN SINGH. A.I.R. 1930 Lah. 609.

———Grant to mahant in personal capacity.

The Settlement Officer, gave a Mahant and his heirs rights as occupancy tenants without a right of transfer, without any condition as to the purposes to which the income of the land was to be devoted, without any reference to their being Mahants of a particular temple and without suggesting that the temple was to benefit from their possession. There were no conditions requiring the Mahant and his successors to devote any portion of the income towards the expenses of the temple. They were granted the property subject only to the condition that they might retain it so long as the temple was in existence.

Held, that the grant was not a grant to the temple, but a grant to an individual on the condition that he satisfied certain expenses of the temple from the income of the property granted, and the land given by the settlement decree was not wakf property given for religious or charitable purpose and Act 14 of 1920 was not applicable.

———Total relinquishment of rights was inferred from the use of words like 'for ever'—Grant held as heritable though no express words used.

A service grant to one B by proprietor of Bettiah Raj contained the following passage:—'Hence because of that good work it is ordered that whatever trees have been planted by his ancestor and also if he plants any, the share of the Raj in them is given up. Hence this parwana is written to all forbidding you in any way to interfere with the trees standing on the nakdi holdings of the said B for ever.

Held: that, considering the context and the other provisions in the document and the evidence relating to subsequent conduct of the parties, the intention was the landlord should relinquish his right to the trees both present and future. Even if a document should contain word such as "always" or "for ever" or similar words, if the grant is clearly the grant of a life-interest only the mere use of such words will not have the effect of extending the grant beyond the life-time of the grantee. But it is equally true if there are no words of limitation in a grant then, even if there are no specific words of inheritance, it may still be a grant in perpetuity. 23 A. 324 (P. C.); 23 C. 838 (P. It is very doubtful whether the Board's Standing Order 52, paragraph 1, Cl. (5), sub. Cl. (3) has the force of law.

In a suit for an injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with the plaintiff's possession of the suit lands, the plaintiff alleged that he had been the kudiwaramdar of the suit lands prior to 1882 on condition of delivering waram to the landlord and that in 1882 the predecessor-in-title of the defendants executed a deed under which the waram was commuted into a fixed money rent and that the defendant claiming to revert to the waram rate, were interfering with the plaintiff harvesting his crops. ———Grant of whole inam village is subject to the rights of community—Where the rights are easements enjoyed by the public the soil belongs to inamdar and he can eject trespasser.

In the case of inam villages the grant of a whole inam village must be taken subject to the rights of the community. In the case of burial grounds, threshing floors, etc., such rights (so long as the character of the site does not charge) may be regarded as vested in the Government. (36 M.L.J. 203, Ref.). But where the rights of the public amount to a bare easement, the inamdar has title to the soil. In the case of an irrigation tank, irrigating certain lands, it is doubtful if there are any rights belonging to the community, as the rights of irrigation appertain to the lands irrigated as easements and the grant must be taken to be subject to the easements. If the tank is one for public drinking and bathing, the grant may be subject to the rights of the public for these purposes ; but there is no reason to hold that the bed does not belong to the inamdar. On the other hand, it is proper to say that it belongs to him. So that, if the tank ceases to be a tank, all rights vest in him and if it continues to be a tank, in the interests of the public, the proper person to take action against a trespasser is the inamdar who is still the owner of the bed and can take action to remove the trespass. ———Service inam and personal inam distinction —Exclusive prior possession against grantee of a title-deed after enfranchisement is of no avail against the grantee.

The lands comprising the emoluments of the karnam office are attached to the office as such, so that even if a stranger to the family is appointed the land goes with the appointment, eligibility to the office is a personal matter; the land goes with the office and is impartible and Government, in the act of enfranchisement, severs the land from the office and allows the office-holder for the time being to enfranchise it. The distinction between the enfranchisement of a service inam and that of a personal inam is that the latter is a mere release of the service obligation, release by the Crown of its reversionary interests, while the former is a resumption of the land by Government and a re-grant of it to whomsoever Government pleases, although no doubt ordinarily the re-grant would be to the holder of the office at the time of the enfranchisement. The enfranchisement of a service inam and the issue of a title-deed thereupon create a new title in the grantee, unless Government had at the time of the resumption no right to resume.

———Hindu joint family—Partition—Subsequent enfranchisement—Divided member should prove that the inam was kept undivided at partition.

The fact of partition from the person in whose name the service inam is enfranchised is not conclusive against a claim to co-parcenary rights in the enfranchised inam lands. Whether the co-parcenary right survives, will have to be determined as a fact in each case. It may be that the office with the inam attached to it was allotted at partition to the co-parcener then holding office as a part of his share. In such a case, persons divided from him would obviously have no rights after enfranchisement. It may be that in view of the peculiar nature of the tenure and the legal impossibility of severing the lands or any portion of them from the office, the inam was kept undivided on the understanding that although till enfranchisement only the office-holder could enjoy it, yet in the event of enfranchisement, all members would be entitled to share. It may be that the other co-parceners were actually allowed by the office-holder to enjoy some portion of the inam land or its profits. If a divided member claims to share in an enfranchised service land the onus lies on him of proving, not only that he is a member of the original service family, but that at any partition which has taken place the inam was kept out of partition as undivided property in which all the sharers retained joint rights.

To call a village a jagir is not sufficient to constitute a jagir.

———Resumable grants—Circumstances leading to the inference that grant is resumable—Service tenures—'Resumption' does not mean that on failure of heirs it 'escheats' to zemindar but only that latter can make a new settlement.

Where the jagir was specifically mentioned as a service tenure involving the performance of police and other duties and a new settlement with the Taluqdar showed that the rent was increased from Rs. 735 to Rs. 1,000, four villages were taken out of the Pargana and set apart for the maintenance of the widows of the previous holder, and a new patta was granted to him by the Maharajah and a new Parvana was issued to him at the zemindar's instance for possession of the jagir.

Held, in face of these facts it is idle to contend that the settlement with the talukdar was a continuance of the old tenure. Had the talukdar succeeded to the jagir by right of inheritance the maintenance of the Ranis, the widows would have exclusively devolved on him and the superior landlord would have had no concern with it or the right to take away any part of the property to provide for their maintenance. The Maharajah's interference on behalf of the widows is explainable only on one hypothesis, viz., that he was making a new arrangement by virtue of a right recognized by the authorities.

"Resumption" in connection with these service tenures does not mean that on failure of the direct male line it "escheats" to the zemindar and becomes what is called his sir or khas property; the jagir retains its character, but the zemindar becomes entitled to make a new settlement with the

A maintenance grant is resumable on the death of the grantee and not on the death of the grantor. A maintenance grant is not absolutely inconsistent with a grant to the donee and his heirs. Such a grant is prima facie resumable on the death of the grantee, but the context may show that it was intended to make provision not only for the donee but for the heirs of the donee. Where the grant is so expressed, the grantor has the right to resume the grant on the extinction of the line of the grantee. It is all a question of construction. The operative clauses in a maintenance grant were in these terms: "I have made a grant of the milkiat right in the Mouzas named below by way of maintenance with the detail as follows. If any of the said three persons or their heirs put forward hereafter any objection against the rais of the Raj, as regards the difference in their maintenance grants which according to the custom obtaining in the family I am competent to assign more to one and less to another, such objection shall not be held legal or tenable in Courts".

A person who claims to hold as a tenant land within the ambit of a zemindary must prove his right to hold it without payment of rent by a grant from the zemindar, but production of the grant itself is not the only way to prove such a grant.

When long possession (here for 62 years) without paying rent has been proved by direct evidence, the Court not only might, but ought to presume that the claim was based upon a grant which is lost. Care must, however, always be taken to see in these cases that long possession is clearly established to have been enjoyed under a definite claim of right in such a manner that in the circumstances it was likely to have attracted the notice of the person or persons whose rights are adversely affected by such a claim.

—Resumption.

———Grant in lieu of wages and grant burdened with services—Distinction—Presumption.

Where a zamindar wants to resume lands granted before the permanent settlement and held by the grantees from father to son, the onus is always on the plaintiff to prove that grant was one in lieu of wages resumable at will.

A village in the Vizianagaram zamindari was granted as early as 1752. The grantees were hillmen. They and their predecessors were in possession for more than 250 years and had brought the land under cultivation. The lands had been descending from father to son and had been alienated without question.

Held: that on the facts, the onus was very heavy on the zamindar seeking to resume the lands to show that the grant was merely a grant in lieu of wages resumable at will and not a grant burdened with service in which case it could not be resumed without at least showing that the services were required to be done and were refused: 13 M.I.A. 438 (P.C.); 28 Bom. 305 and A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 511, Rel. on. (Kumaraswami Sastri, Curgenven and Walsh, JJ.). GRANT—Resumption.

———Zamindar can resume grant only if land is in his zamindari and is assessed to revenue—Inclusion of revenue is presumed if services for the grant were personal.

Whether a zamindar can resume a grant, will depend upon whether the revenue from the land was or was not included in the assets of the zamindari at the time of the settlement. If it was included, the right of resumption would be with the zamindar, if not, he would not have that right. If there is no direct evidence to show whether the revenue was or was not included, one may turn to the nature of the services as they may furnish a clue. If the services were personal to the zamindar, it may reasonably be assumed that the Government would not have exempted the land from the revenue, but would have treated it, for the purpose of the settlement, as revenue-paying land. Shankalap and marwat grants in Oudh are ordinary grants which connote under proprietary tenure. Where, however, the grantor adds that the grantee will not have transferable right, the grantee and his successors will hold lands with heritable but non-transferable rights under a grant. The grantee or his successor can make a valid transfer of the subject-matter of the grant in spite of the restraint on the power of alienation imposed originally by one of the terms of the grant; but having regard to that term such a transfer can only be valid as between the transferor and the transferee. The restraint against alienation being for the benefit of the grantor will be given effect to in his favour only. There is an essential difference between restrictions on transfers imposed by the Legislature and those imposed by a Court or decree by grant and there are cases in which for the protection of particular interest it is deemed expedient to depart from the general principle and to fetter the privilege of free alienation. In such cases, the prohibition against transfer being founded upon consideration of public interest must be treated as absolute : 15 O. C 67, Appr. (Stuart, C. J. and Wazir Hasan, J.). ———Lease for long term—Validity—Test.

In dealing with the question whether a lease for a long term of inalienable property like service inam is void, the Court has to see the nature of the transaction rather than the form. The real question is whether the transaction in effect places the income from the lands beyond the disposal of the holder of the office and prevents him from enjoying the emoluments which were intended to go to the holder of the office in order to enable him to discharge his duties properly.

Permanent leases or leases for so long a period as would practically amount to an alienation will be invalid as against the successor-in-office who will be entitled to the rents and other emoluments, arising out of the land which goes with the office, but if the lease is not of this character, it is not absolutely void but only voidable at the instance of the successor-in-office. Where a premium is taken, one test will be whether the rent paid is sufficient to maintain the holder of that office in such a way as not to interfere with the due performance of the duties attached to the office. To determine whether a certain grant is resumable or not, regard must be had to the nature of the tenure and to the fact whether the grant was made in lieu of wages for service or it was an absolute grant subject to the condition of the performance of the service. ———Karnam, Land attached to office of, goes with office and is impartible—Enfranchisement gives the then owner full rights—Other members of family cannot claim partition thereof—Law governing palayam tenures are not applicable to this case.

In Madras the Karnam of the village occupies his office not by hereditary or family right, but as personal appointee, though in certain cases that appointment is primarily exercised in favour of a suitable person who is a member of a particular family. Therefore it followed that lands held as appurtenant to the office so enjoyed should continue to go with that office and should accordingly be impartible. Venkata v. Rama, (1884) 8 Mad. 249 (F. B.); Venkatarayudu v. Venkataramayya, (1891) 15 Mad. 284. Appr.

A case of a Palayam tenure and that of Karnam are quite separate and cannot be treated as being governed by analogical principle.

When a Palayam was abolished in so far as the duty of rendering military service was concerned, the estate was continued with all its hereditary incidents to the Palayaghar in the same manner as is possessed by a zamindar. It is different with regard to a case of a Karnam. A hereditary right in a Karnam or his family can only, at the utmost be said to constitute a certain spes among persons within the area of selection of those eligible for the office. But it is not even so limited. The power of selection rests with the administrative officials, who alone are Judges of the eligibility of the Karnam for the time being, and it is the settled law of Madras that the emoluments in the shape of lands follow the office, ex-necessitate. Otherwise the holder of the lands might be some person other than the holder of the office. Pingala Lakshmi v. Bommireddipalli Chalamayya, (1907) 30 Mad. 434, Overruled.

GRANT—Service Grant.

Therefore the title deed, granted to the appellant's father at the time of enfranchisement of the Karnam by way of an Inam, which was in express words confirmed to him, and was, "now confirmed to you, your representatives and assigns to hold or dispose of as you or they think proper," must be given full effect to and hence it is not subject to be eviscerated or altered by any claim for partition or division put forward by way of defence to such a suit. —Shrotriem grant.

———No presumption of inclusion of kudivaram and melvaram or of exclusion of kudivaram.

There is no presumption that a shrotriem grant includes both melvaram and kudivaram or that it does not include kudivaram. Each case must be decided on its own circumstances: A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 292, Foll.; 43 Mad. 92; A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 1; 70 I.C. 729 (F.B.). Reversed.

"Shrotriem" according to Wilson's Glossary means "a grant of lands or a village held at favourable rates, properly an assignment of lands or revenue to a Brahmin learned in the Vedas but latterly applied to similar assignments to native servants of Governments, Civil or Military, and both Hindus and Mahomedans as a reward for past services. A shrotriem grant gives no right over the lands and the grantees cannot interfere with the occupants as long as they pay the established rents." But the effect of latter legal decisions is that a shrotriem grant may in fact grant the kudivaram as well as melvaram. Where the document itself in the final recital uses the term again "as we have granted to you the said agraharam you should enjoy the same from son to grandson, paying the shrotriem thereon and be happy." The term can only mean revenue though this consideration in itself is not conclusive. Where the grantors were Deshpandyas who were revenue officials of farmers of revenue under the paramount authority, the strong probability is that they granted that which in their position as Deshpandyas they would possess, viz., the rights over the revenue. The remaining half of the price was allowed to remain with the vendee subject to the condition that on the minor attaining majority, it should be paid to the minor with interest at 6 per cent. per annum. A promissory note was taken for the sum and the vendee acted in good faith,

Held, that the sale was valid and that the execution of the promissory note for the unpaid half of the purchase money did not put an end to the vendor's lien for the unpaid purchase money and was not imprudent. Held, that step-mother as the de facto guardian had power to make or to extend the licenses covering the sites in suit, and that the granting of the licenses was beneficial to the minor's estate: 10 N. L. R. 133, Disapp.

—Arbitration.

———Reference to, by guardian on competent legal advice.

In a suit by a minor to set aside a decree on the ground of the guardian's negligence, it is necessary to show that firstly, the guardian was guilty of negligence, that is to say, of such want of care as was required of him under the circumstances and secondly that such negligence resulted in a decision being given against him.

Thus, where the guardian acting under competent legal advice and with the Court's sanction on behalf of the minors referred the dispute to the arbitration of a sole arbitrator, empowering him to decide the dispute uko bil mukto, within or beyond the issue as he likes," such expression being commonly used in references filed in Court in these parts, and the arbitrator after arriving at his decision on merits has used uko bil mukto powers (power of awarding lump sum) for the benefit of the minors and the decision with regard to the outstandings is also in favour of the minors,

Held, (a) that the reference to arbitration did not amount to negligence : (b) that the reference is not rendered ipso facto invalid by use of the expression uko bil mukto within or beyond the issues, (c) that the minors actually benefitted by the act of the guardian and cannot succeed. Held, that assuming that she the executant (sister of minors) was a de facto guardian she does not purport in the document to bind the minors. They cannot therefore be personally responsible on the note, nor could the sister, as the next friend or as sister of the minors, make a contract with the plaintiff which would bind the estate of the minors. Failure to set up proper defences by the guardian to a suit against the minor is gross negligence and on that ground the minor can get the decree set aside. Held, that the non-production by the guardian of a document executed by two of the sons who thereby undertook to share the liability with their father, did not under the circumstances amount to gross negligence by the guardian so as to entitle the minor to re-open the decree on his attaining majority. The other limit is that, supposing that at the time of the transaction the guardians who acted actually were guardians appointed by the Court and they made an application to the Court for sanctioning a particular transaction, the circumstances must be such as the Court would consider justifiable for the purpose of sanctioning the transaction. A Hindu died leaving behind a widow and minor children. The widow embraced Mahomedanism and took her children to live with her and they lived with her for a period of nearly four years. Subsequently a Hindu on behalf of the Hindu Mahasabha demanded them to be brought up as Hindus,

Held, that it was the duty of people interested to intervene at once and to go to the Court and to ask that the Court should protect the minor children from being converted to Mahomedanism. But as nearly four years had been allowed to pass without any application, the application on behalf of the Mahasabha could not be granted. The right view in such a case must be what was best in the interests of the children. Where the children had for a long time remained as Mahomedans and were happy and well-looked after, no order changing their mode of life could be made. (Mears, C. J. and Sen, J.). GUARDIANS AND WARDS ACT (1890)—Nature of proceedings.

—Duty of Court.

———State as guardian—Policy of law.

The state from the earliest times is supposed to be the guardians of the infants and the earliest regulations gave effect to this principle and made provisions for the custody of the minors and when the state assumes direct custody of the infant it undertakes to bring up the boy as his natural father or guardian would have done, that is, in the traditions of the family to which after becoming major he has to revert. The state has made provisions for the care of infants by statutory provisions such as Court of Wards Act and the Guardians and Wards Act. The District Judge under the latter Act exercises the functions and becomes the protector and the guardians of infants by exercising the power to appoint guardians of the persons and properties of the infants. Therefore no Court should grudge the trouble and worry on assuming charge of the estate of the minor, that would necessarily occur so long as an infant has not attained majority. Those powers would include the power to sell where the adoption of such a course is deemed to be necessary for the protection of the interests of the minor. In considering the guardianship of a minor who is an adopted son, the first consideration must be with regard to the interest and the welfare of the minor, and, after that the Court has to see how far the intentions of the adoptive father can be best carried out. Nothing should be done the effect of which will be to frustrate the wishes of the adoptive parents, by eventually leading the boy to disregard the traditions of the family of his adoption. So long as any member of the adoptive family fit to be appointed guardian is forthcoming, the Court should not appoint the natural father of the minor as his guardian. So in a competition between the adoptive paternal grandmother and the natural father of the adopted boy the paternal grandmother should be preferred: 15 C.W.N. 558, Dist. (Adami and Sen, JJ.). A married sister of a minor applied for being appointed as a guardian. The application was opposed by "the Society for the Protection of Children in India." The sister was the only person who could be entrusted with the care of the boy and there was no definite evidence of ill-treatment of the minor against her. The minor was above 14 years of age and showed a decided preference for his sister. The other relations of the minor did not come forward to act as the guardian of the minor either in respect of his person or of his property, and there was no opposition offered by any of these relations to the appointment of sister as guardian of the minor,

Held, that in the interests of the minor the sister should be appointed as the guardian of the person of the minor; the Society as a philanthrophic and charitable institution, willing to do good to unprotected children may be allowed to visit the minor, at his house, and take all measures necessary or expedient to protect the minor from harm, whether moral or physical, in co-operation with the guardian: 2 C. ———Appointment of guardian by Court—Principles applicable.

Under the Guardians and Wards Act a Court in appointing a guardian or declaring a guardian of the minor is guided first by the provisions of S. 17 of the Act and secondly by what appears to be the welfare of the minor consistently with the law to which the minor is subject. By placing the provisions of the section above the law to which the minor is subject the Act makes it open to the Court to consider other matters as well as the personal law even if they are opposed to that law. Thus the Court may consider the opinion of the minor, whatever it may be if he is old enough to form an intelligent preference and in considering what is for the welfare of the minor the Court must have regard to his age, sex and religion and any existing or previous relations of the proposed guardian with the minor or his property. His application was granted by the District Judge in spite of the decision of his predecessor that the interests of the uncle were adverse to those of the minor. The reasons why the uncle's petition was granted were that after the appointment of the mother and the grandmother serious disputes arose between them, and the uncle.

In appointing a guardian for the property of a minor, the Court has to decide first whether the appointment of a guardian is necessary and, having decided that it is, it has to select from among those who are willing to act, the person who is most likely to manage the property best, and the decision of both points depends solely, as is laid down in Ss. 7 and 17, on what is for the minor's welfare. Nearness of kin comes into consideration only because a person nearly related to the minor is likely to look after his interests better and more keenly than a more distant relative. The wishes of the persons connected most nearly with the minor that a certain person should be appointed to look after his property can only be taken into consideration as evidence that that person will probably be the best manager of it. In considering the matter from the point of view of the welfare of the minor the Court should with advantage look to the circumstances which may possibly stand in the way of the child being properly looked after. The first and paramount consideration of the Court is the welfare of the child which is not to be measured by money only or by physical comfort only but is to be taken in its widest sense. ———What is meant by S. 19 is that where the father of the minor is living and is not incompetent to be the guardian of the person of the minor, no other person shall be appointed as guardian of the person of such minor. It does not restrict the right of the father though he is the natural guardian under the personal law of the minor, to apply to be appointed guardian under the Act. Such appointment may confer on him higher rights than what he possesses as the natural guardian and in dealing with the outer world the certificate granted by the Judge confers a greater importance on his powers than what he possesses as the natural guardian: A.I.R. 1922 Bom. 405, Diss. from. (Suhrawardy and Graham, JJ.). Held, that prima facie as the receipt was payabl to either or survivor on the death of the grandfather, the legal interest would pass to the minor, but at any rate it was obviously for the welfare of the minor that he should not be compelled to bring a suit as regards this deposit receipt and it should be left to the parties to establish their title to this receipt in a civil suit. GUARDIANS AND WARDS ACT (1890), S. 24—Conditions in certificate.

———Any friend of a minor may approach the Court in the case of the minor being ill-treated and invoke the protection of the Court on behalf of the minor. But it is another question altogether if an outsider invokes the protection of the Court for a minor who is in the lawful custody of her father, unless the applicant can satisfy the Court that it is for the welfare of the minor that an order should be made against the father. Where a stranger, the spiritual head of the community made an application to deprive the father of the custody and the natural guardianship of the minor girl, on the ground that she was about to be married at the early age of four which would expose her to the risk of premature widowhood, and that the father was about to sacrifice his daughter's interests by resorting to the practice of Sata marriages with a view to secure a bride for himself,

Held, general considerations of that character, which are not opposed to the practice of the community to which the parties belong, cannot be ordinarily accepted as a sufficient ground for depriving the father of such rights as he has to look after the welfare of his minor children. Held, that the welfare of the minor was the only test in such a case and that the grounds set out would not be a justification for sanctioning the marriage of such a young boy.

Held, also that it was not in the province of the Judge to set at naught the principle underlying the Sarda Act or to teach others to flout it. (Venkatasubba Rao and Madhavan Nair, JJ.). VENKATARAJU v. SUBBARAO. 1930 M.W.N. 57.

GUARDIANS AND WARDS ACT (1890), S. 25—Father's application for custody.

The only remedy of a father for the custody of his minor son is by an application under S. 25: 42 M. 647; 38 M. 807 (P. C.), Rel. on. The words "removed from his custody" should receive a liberal construction as including removal from constructive custody. ——Neither the fact that the child has never been actually in the custody of the father nor the fact that the father has never been appointed guardian of the child by an order of the Court prevents the application of S. 25. An order appointing a father guardian of his child under the Guardians and Wards Act would be wholly ultra vires. (Wazir Hasan, A.J.C.). CHHOTE LAL v. CHANDRA KUNWAR. 80 I.C. 71=11 O.L.J. 537= A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 257.

——The decision of the question whether it would be for thewelfare of the child to return to the custody of its guardian depends entirely on the circumstances of each case. When the guardian of the person of a ward applies for the custody of the ward, he is only asking the Court to help him to discharge the duty cast on him by law with reference to his ward and it is for those who oppose such an application to make out that the welfare of the ward will be better served by its being kept out of the custody of its guardian and retained in the custody of the person against whom the application is made. This onus is especially heavy when the guardian is the father of the child.

A child of four years was brought up from its birth by its maternal grand-parents. The father applied to recover custody of the child's person. The maternal grandfather opposed the application on the grounds that (1) the application was made through spite and was not bona fide, inasmuch as the father was led to make it because of the grandfather's threatening to sue him for partition of the child's property which the father was wasting; (2) that the father had ill-treated the child's mother before her death and had married a second wife; and (3) that as the child was brought up from its birth by its maternal grandmother, it would be cruel to remove him from her,

Held, that none of these grounds, even if true, would be sufficient to deprive the father of the custody of his child. Even considering the matter entirely from the point of view of the welfare of the minor, it could not be to the minor's welfare to estrange him from his father at this tender age: A. I. R. 1914 P. C. 41; 28 M. L. J. 442; A. I. R. 1924 Mad. 45; A. I. R. 1924 All. 622; 29 M. L. J. 442 and 29 All. 210, Rel. on; 22 M. L. J. 247, Dist. (Madhavan Nair and Thiruvenkatachariar, JJ.). ——What a Court has to look to on applications under Habeas Corpus is the interest of the child as being paramount.

A father made an application for a writ of Habeas Corpus directing that the custody of his son aged about 7 or 8 should be delivered to him. There was nobody in his house to look after the child of such tender age, he himself being a driver of motor car,

Held, that the High Court should not interfere and the proper course for the father would be to set the Court in motion locally under S. 25, Guardians and Wards Act. ——Considerations to weigh with the Court.

A father cannot be appointed guardian under the Guardians and Wards Act He can delegate the performance of the daily duties of looking after the child and for that purpose place the child under the custody of some one else. If he does so, it then becomes the question under S. 25 for the Court to decide when he applies for the restoration of the custody, whether it is for the welfare of the minor,

GUARDIANS AND WARDS ACT (1890), S. 25—Father's application for custody.

Where an application is made for the restoration of the custody of the child by the father the Court should see what is right over the child, rather than try to see what the character of the father is. Thus a quarrel with the mother of the boy or distrusting the mother's moral character are not sufficient to deprive him of the custody of the child. Nor the fact that he left the infant child (girl) of his in the charge of his wife's family relatives. (Walsh, Ag. C.J. and Neave, J.). SUKHDEO RAI v. RAM CHANDER. 83 I. C. 24=5 L.R.A. ———An order under Cl. —S. 25—Habeas corpus.

———On an application by the de jure guardian for habeas corpus in respect of a child detained against its will the dominant question is what conduces to the interests and welfare of the infant and the Court must dispose of the application with reference to it. The moral, the religious and the physical welfare and the ties of affection as also the opinion of the child if it is capable of forming an intelligent opinion are to be taken into consideration. The opinion of the child is an important element and the degree of the child's mental development must to a certain extent weigh with the Court. The age of the infant is also an important factor. There is no inflexible rule in England that a boy over 14 and a girl over 16 will have the final voice and that the wishes of the infant have to be given effect to. Even if such a rule exists it is too artificial to be applicable in India. (Venkatasubba Rao, J.). —S. 27—Appointment of guardian as guardian ad litem.

———Duty of guardian.

Where the proposed guardian has been served with notice and objects to appear as such on behalf of the ward, the Court ought to appoint some other proper person to act as guardian.

GUARDIANS AND WARDS ACT (1890), S. 27—Appointment of guardian as guardian ad litem.

The Code of 1882 contains no provision similar to that found in O. 32, R. 4 (3) of the Code of 1908. In the absence of any such provision, where a person has voluntarily applied to be appointed guardian of the person and property of a minor under the provisions of the Guardians and Wards Act, he is bound to deal with the ward's property as if it were his own and to do everything which is reasonable and proper for the protection and benefit of the property entrusted to him. This obligation in fact arises under S. 27 of the Guardians and Wards Act. If therefore the Guardian has been served with notice of his appointment as guardian ad litem in a suit against his ward and chooses to take no steps to object to his appointment, the Court may well presume that he consents thereto, and the mere fact that he does not enter appearance or defend the action can afford no presumption that he repudiates liability. 30 I.A. 182; 30 Cal. 1021, Foll. The Court after satisfying itself of the fact of minority is bound to appoint a proper person to act on behalf of the minor in the conduct of the case, but, a defect in following the rules referred to in S. 443 is not necessarily fatal to the proceedings: 34 C.L.J. 302; 30 I.A. 182. It is erroneous to set aside under S. 29, Guardians and Wards Act a compromise entered into by a guardian of minor appointed for the purposes of litigation, on the ground that no permission of the District Judge for the compromise had been obtained : 8 C. —S. 29—Conditions regarding alienation.

———Conditions precedent and conditions subsequent.

A distinction must be drawn between a condition precedent and a condition subsequent imposed on the guardian of a minor to transfer the minor's property. Non-compliance with a condition precedent will vitiate a transfer made by the guardian. But the same cannot be the effect of non-compliance with a condition subsequent unless there is something in the order granting permission to transfer the minor's property casting an obligation on the transferee of that property to do some act subsequent to the execution of the deed of transfer in his favour. The only duty cast upon the transferee by law is that he must satisfy himself that the order sanctioning the transfer has been strictly complied with by the guardian up to the time of the execution of the deed of transfer, and that no conditions precedent imposed by the order have been violated. If the conditions precedent have been complied with by the transferee in conformity with the permission granted by the District Judge, a good title will pass to the transferee, and the failure of the guardian to comply with the subsequent conditions cannot divest the title already vested in the transferee by the transfer: 26 C.W.N. 218; 3 A.L.J. 30, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1924 All. 474, Dist. (Iqbal Ahmed and Kendall, JJ.). ———Non-compliance.

Where the District Judge acting under the Guardian and Wards Act empowers the guardian to sell a property of the minors for an alleged debt of theirs and further directs him to put in the bonds after these have been satisfied and so endorsed by the creditor it does not follow that non-compliance with the latter direction vitiates the sale if actually carried out and the vendee has all along been in possession of the purchased property. Where the same property is held partly by adult co-sharers and partly by minors the very fact that the minor's share was sold for a price a little over that for which the shares of adult co-owners was sold goes to indicate the bona fides of the sales of the shares of the minors. ———Sanction of Court—Effect.

The Guardians and Wards Act throws the entire responsibility for granting permission to the guardian to do any of the acts mentioned in S 29 upon the Civil Court and therefore a due enquiry by the Civil Court must take place before the permission can be granted by it to the guardian to do any of those acts. Where therefore an order has been made authorising the guardian to raise a loan on the security of the infant's estate the lender of the money is entitled to trust that order, and he is not bound to inquire as to the expediency or necessity of the loan for the benefit of the infant's estate. If any fraud or underhand dealing is brought home to him that would be a different matter; but, apart from any charge of that kind, he is entitled to rest upon the order : 5 Cal. 363 and 11 Cal. 379 (P.C.), Foll.; A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 135, Expl.; 6 M.I.A. 393 (P.C.), Ref.

—S. 30—Contents of sanction order.

———The object of the legislature was to guarantee an enquiry by the Judge and a determination by him to his own satisfaction that the alienation sanctioned was necessary or advantageous. But where there was no enquiry the order was not a nullity. The legislature contemplated an enquiry by the District Judge into the nature of the proposed transaction before he sanctioned an alienation by a guardian of the estate of his ward. But it does not follow that if sanction has been granted by the District Judge without enquiry, his act is without jurisdiction and that the transaction is invalid. The effect of such omission cannot be more far-reaching in its destructive operation than an alienation by the guardian without the requisite sanction. In that event, S. 30 provides that the alienation is not void but voidable, and in order to avoid it, the plaintiff must face the fundamental question whether the transaction was for his benefit. GUARDIANS AND WARDS ACT (1890), S. 31—Draft of sale-deed.

—S. 31—Attacking sanction.

———On an application by a guardian to the District Judge for permission to sell the minor's property to pay off certain debt, the Judge passed an ordor simply granting permission to sell a portion of a property to defray a debt of Rs. 6,700. The guardian however effected a sale for Rs. 1,800 and the sale included some debts that were not binding on the minor,

Held, that the order did not conform to the mandatory provisions of S. 31 (2) of the Guardians and Wards Act and that the sale was not binding on the minor.

The sanction granted by a District Judge for the sale of a minor's property has no special sanctity in itself but can be attacked on the ground not only that it was given as a result of fraud but also that it was otherwise improper, and did not satisfy every requirement of S. 31, sub-S. (2) of the Guardians and Wards Act. (Pullan, A.J.C.). RAMADHIN SINGH v. RAM SUMER SINGH.

The order of permission to sell was as follows:

Held, (Per Ashworth and Simpson, A. J. Cs., Wazir Hasan, A. J. C., dissenting.) The condition was a condition precedent. The failure to submit the draft to the Judge renders the sale invalid.

Per Wazir Hasan, *A. J. —S. 31—Duty of Court.

———It is the duty of the Court to which an application is made under S. 29 of the Act for sanction of the sale of a minor's property, to satisfy itself by enquiry that the transaction is necessary and is for the minor's benefit and a creditor is entitled to rely on an order of sanction as evidence that the Court has satisfied itself on this point and that the transaction is a proper one: A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 135, Rel. on; 11 Cal. 379, Foll. (Daniels and Neave, JJ.), BUDDHOO (ALIAS) GULAB DAS v. SHEO CHARAN. 82 I.C. 328=22 A.L.J. 851=5 L.R.A. —S. 31—Effect of sanction.

———A vendee from the guardian of a minor is entitled to rely on the Court's sanction absolutely and is not bound to inquire into the benefit or necessity of the transaction: 11 Cal. 379, Foll. (Dalip Singh, J.). INDAR SINGH v. PEARA SINGH. 103 I.C. 698=A.I.R. 1927 Lah. 665.

—S. 31—Facts to be considered.

———All that the District Judge has to consider in an application by the certificated guardian for sale of the minor's property is, whether such a sale is necessary or is for the evident advantage of the ward. While granting permission the District Judge should mention that the transaction may take place at a certain figure, the certificated guardian, however, should not be directed to sell to a certain party; the sanction under S. 31 is therefore complete authority to the certificated guardian to sell to any person he likes who is willing to comply with the terms upon which permission to sell is accorded by the District Judge. (Das and Fazl Ali, JJ.). GOBARDHAN LAL v. SHEO NARAYAN. 117 I.C. 161=8 Pat. 226= A.I.R. 1929 Pat. 202.

———Grant.

In granting permission to the guardian to transfer any property of the minor, it is the duty of the Court to see that the transaction confers the highest benefit to the minor. If on account of the competition between the purchasers, the minor gets a higher value for the property which was intended to be sold it is not the business of the Judge to enquire into the motive which led the rival purchasers to offer higher bids. It is to the advantage of the minor that there should be competition. For the sake of convenience and for the purpose of finding a purchaser who would offer the highest value for the property, Court may direct issue of proclamation of sale and direct the Nazir to sell the property. If the Judge makes an order on the representation of a statutory guardian for sale of the property of his ward for the value suggested by the guardian, he may withdraw that order if it is brought to his notice that a higher value can be obtained for the minor's property than the value for which the guardian was going to sell it. It may not be due to the guardian's improvidence; it may be due to his inability to find proper purchasers with his best endeavours to do so, that he may suggest a lower value. (*Newbould and B.B. —S. 31—Fraud.

———The sanction of the District Court to an alienation by the guardian of a minor must recite the necessity for the alienation in compliance with S. 31 (2). The sanction given by Courts is only prima facie evidence that the sanction is a good one and it is open to the minor to show at any future time that the alienation was fraudulent and invalid and is not binding on him. The sanction of the Court merely shifts the burden on to the plaintiff to show that the alienation was not for necessity and does not bind him. (Spencer and Ramesam, JJ.). —S. 31—Fraudulent Act.

———Leaving no margin of time for the Judge to enquire.

Fraud is infinite in variety: sometimes it is audacious and unblushing; sometimes it pays a sort of homage to virtue, and then it is modest and retiring: it would be honesty itself if it could only afford it. But fraud is fraud all the same; and it is the fraud, not the manner of it, which calls for the interposition of the Court. Fraud is an extrinsic collateral act, which vitiates the most solemn proceedings of Courts of justice. Where no margin of time was left for the Judge under S. 31 (2) of the Guardians and Wards Act which might be utilized in making any inquiry into the nature of the proposed sale and its effect on the interests of the minors:

Held, that such deliberate inaction on the part of manager of minor's property with the object of gaining an unfair advantage was an act calculated to deceive and therefore fraudulent: Reddaway v. Banham, (1896) A. C. 199, Foll. (Dalal and Wazir Hasan, A.J.Cs.). MOHAN LAL v. MOHAMMAD ADIL. 89 I.C. 69=12 O.L.J. 453= 2 O.W.N. 601=A. I. R. 1926 Oudh 88.

—S. 31—Non-compliance.

———Non-compliance with the provisions of para. 2 to S. 31 has not the effect of rendering the order of the District Judge null and void; but it is only an irregularity: 11 C.L.J. 197, Rel. on. (Das and Allanson, JJ.). —S. 31—Order without enquiry.

———Where a Judge in a case in which an enquiry is necessary allows through his remissness a transaction to take place to the detriment of the minor the sanction which he has given is not a bar to a re-opening of the transaction. But apart from the fact that the law itself does not order an inquiry, absence of inquiry would not vitiate the transaction if the Judge has been able to conclude a good bargain. (Stuart, C. J. and Raza, J.). SAJID HUSSAIN v. ABDUL RAHIM. 115 I. C. 273= A.I.R. 1929 Oudh 354.

———Under S. 31 permission to the guardian to sell property shall not be granted by Court except in case of necessity, or for an evident advantage to the ward. This provision of law indicates that the Judge obtains jurisdiction to sanction the sale only when he makes a proper inquiry as to the necessity and advantage of the sale. The want of such an inquiry without which the Judge is prohibited from granting permission to sell property, amounts to a want of jurisdiction in the Judge to proceed with the matter and his order is in consequence a nullity. (Dalal and Wazir Hasan, A. J. Cs.). MOHAN LAL v. MAHAMMAD ADIT. 89 I. C. 69= 12 O. L. J. 453=2 O. W. N. 601= A. I. R. 1926 Oudh 88.

—S. 31—Procedure.

———The violation of the procedure prescribed by S. 31 (2) for recording the order granting the permission cannot be made the ground of brushing aside the finality of the order as enacted by S. 48. The only condition in which the finality prescribed by S. 48 can be avoided is to establish that the order granting the permission was a nullity.

An order passed by a Court in violation of such rules of procedure, however mandatory, as relate merely to the form of the order cannot be treated as a nullity. The omission to follow such rules of procedure can amount to no more than a mere irregularity or a material irregularity in the circumstances of a particular case. On the other hand, an order passed by a Court in violation of such rules of procedure, the observance of which only invests the Court with jurisdiction to pass the order, is a nullity : 25 Bom. 337 (P.C.) and 42 Cal. 72 (P.C.), Foll. (Wazir Hasan and Neave, A.J.Cs.). ———Institution of suit on minor's behalf.

Where there was a dispute between the sons and a minor daughter of a deceased Mahomedan regarding the division of property and where the minor daughter's guardian in the Court of the District Judge, with the consent of the District Judge, entered into certain arbitration proceedings in order to settle the disputes, and where an award was passed, but in the meantime the girl was married and the husband who was appointed guardian of his wife presented a petition to the District Judge asking for the Court's permission to institute a suit on behalf of his wife for the purpose of having the award and the decree which had been passed, set aside on the ground of fraud and collusion but it was dismissed ;

Held, that the order dismissing the application was not one under S. 43, and was not appealable, but was one apparently in proceeding taken under S. 33, and that it must be taken that the Court was of opinion that the suit which the guardian proposed to file was a suit which should not be brought and so the order would not prevent the guardian from bringing the suit, if he was so advised but in bringing the suit he would act at his own risk and would not be entitled to the indemnity which was conferred upon guardians acting with advice of the Court under sub-S. 3, S. 33. —S. 34—Interpretation.

———"Account" used in connection with S. 34 (c) and (d) must mean a just and true account. Where the amount is a liquidated sum and clearly earmarked for a purpose the Court can amend the accounts by striking out the objectionable amount or it may reject the account on the ground that it is an untrue account of the guardian's liability and direct the guardian to submit a fresh account within limited time. But it is the duty of the Court to decide what is the balance due and the guardian's version is not final: 21 C.W.N. 688, Dist. (Walsh, Ag. C.J. and Neave, J.). SITA RAM v. MT. —S. 34—Procedure.

———The procedure laid down in S. 145, C.P. Code is not applicable to the case of a surety under the Guardians and Wards Act. Section 145 deals with something more than a mere mode of trial in a pending proceeding, and confers a substantive right of making a person, who is not a party to a pending suit to be made party to it and to be

—S. 34—Re-payment.

———Clause (d) does not empower the Court to direct the guardian to pay into Court more than the amount shown to be due in the accounts exhibited by him. What is contemplated is not a decision of substantive rights of the parties. The words "on those accounts" point to the same conclusion. 67 I.C. 309, Dis. 25 C.L.J. 149, Foll. The juxtaposition of three Ss. 34, 35 and 36 seems to indicate that when the measure of the guardian's liability is put in issue, the proper course seems to apply to the Court under S. 35 or S. 36 and then file a regular suit against the guardian: A.I.R. 1924 All. 593, Diss. An order against a guardian regarding liability not admitted by him may be treated as one under S. 43 and treated as appealable.

—S. 34—Scope.

———An order appointing a person guardian of the property of a minor, conditional on his furnishing security, is not void ab initio. Section 7 of the Act, which empowers the Court to make an order appointing a guardian of the person or property of the minor is comprehensive in its terms and does not lay down, expressly or by necessary implication, that the Court cannot impose a condition of this kind, in cases where it thinks fit to do so.

Section 34 (a) is not exhaustive as to the powers of the Court to demand security. It obviously confers on the Court powers which are additional and not exclusive. It deals with the obligations of a guardian of property, who has already been appointed as such, and empowers the Court to require him to furnish security if and when, subsequent to his appointment, it becomes necessary to do so. It does not in any manner control or qualify S. 7 under which the Court has full power to make the appointment on such terms and subject to such conditions as it, in its discretion, considers conducive to the welfare of the minor: 30 M.L.J. 508, Disc.; 40 Mad. 775, Foll.: A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 36 (F.B.), Diss. from; 24 I.C. 202, Ref. (Shadi Lal, C.J., Broadway and Tek Chand, JJ.). ———Orders under, should relate to cash in hand only.

It is only that cash which the guardian would have had, if he had followed the Court's directions as regards investment, that the Court can under S. 34 compel him to produce. —S. 35—Applicability.

———Section 35 is perfectly general and can apply to a case where the ward was a minor or to a case where the ward has ceased to be a minor. The section is intended to cover both the cases. There is nothing in S. 35 making it inapplicable to the case of a ward attaining majority and applying for an assignment of the bond: 42 Mad. 302 and A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 977, Diss. from. (Ramesam and Jackson, JJ.). —S. 35—Discretion of Court.

———The words "as trustee for the ward" in S. 35 do not prevent the Court's ordering an assignment in favour of the transferee of a ward who has attained majority. A certificated guardian who has accepted the position of a trustee by virtue of an order passed by a Court of law will not be heard to say that he did not do his duty but let the properties remain under the management of somebody else. ———It cannot be said that a failure to keep accounts of trust property is not a failure to perform a very important duty of the trust and the illiteracy which is a bar to the performance of such duty can be looked upon as an incapacity under S. 39. When, however, there is a dispute relating to succession, or the likelihood even of a dispute as to succession, the Court has no powers under the Guardians and Wards Act to seek to determine the succession to a deceased minor and thereupon make any orders for granting delivery of possession of property.

GUARDIANS AND WARDS ACT (1890), S. 41—Legal representative of guardian.

A Court acting under the Guardians and Wards Act is really functus officio, when the minor dies. 92 I. C. 570=22 M.L.W. 642=1926 M.W.N. 68=A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 148.

———After the death of a ward the person who had been a guardian does not continue to be guardian. Section 41 must be read so far as possible to give effect to what may be supposed to be the reasonable intentions of the Legislature. When a ward dies the Court should generally direct the guardian to deliver the property into Court or to deliver the property to some person producing an heirship certificate. In very rare cases the latter precaution might be dispensed with but in that case the Court should otherwise guarantee the interests of possible claimants. A list of contingencies on the happening of which the powers of the guardian cease is not necessarily exhaustive and even if it is exhaustive it is arguable that Cl. (c) applies. Order for accumulative and progressive fine is, if not without jurisdiction, yet, is inappropriate. The fine is not to be levied except in the case of recusancy which is something more than disobedience and if it is intended to use those powers, as a general rule, it is better to fix some date on which the guardian is to comply with the orders of the Court or demonstrate why he is unable to do so. GUARDIANS AND WARDS ACT (1890), S. 43—Marriage of minor.

The state from the earliest times is supposed to be the guardian of the infants and the earliest regulations gave effect to this principle and made provisions for the custody of the minors and when the state assumes direct custody of the infant it undertakes to bring up the boy as his natural father or guardian would have done, that is in the traditions of the family to which after becoming major he has to revert. The state has made provisions for the care of infants by statutory provisions such as Court of Wards Act and the Guardians and Wards Act. The District Judge under the latter Act exercises the functions and becomes the protector and guardian of the infants by exercising the power to appoint guardians of the persons and properties of the infants. Therefore no Court should grudge the trouble and worry on assuming charge of the estate of the minor, that would necessarily occur so long as an infant has not attained majority. —S. 43—Marriage of minor.

———Appellate Court, powers of.

One of the duties of a guardian of a minor girl is to provide a suitable bridegroom. Whatever he does in relation to that is either conduct or proceedings within the meaning of S. 43. Where a Court authorises the guardian to celebrate the marriage of the girl, his act is a regulation of conduct or proceeding on the part of the guardian. The appellate Court has therefore the right to hear appeal from such an order under the provisions of S. 47 (1) read with S. 43. (Mears, C. J. and Sen, J.). ———It is well settled that under its delegated powers from the Sovereign as parens patriae of infants it is competent for the Court to restrain by an injunction an unsuitable marriage of an infant whether he or she be a ward of Court or not and that this rule equally applies to Hindus and Mahomedans. Where the Court has not assumed superintendence of the person of an infant it is prima facie necessary that the Court should be moved to prevent such an unsuitable marriage. But different considerations apply where the Court has, as a matter of fact, assumed superintendence of the infant and in pursuance thereof has transferred its duties to a person of its own choice called the certificated guardian and has charged him with the custody of the infant on behalf of the Court. In that case it is incumbent upon the Court to take all necessary precautions to prevent the person so entrusted from doing any act which is likely to result in irremediable injury to the ward. And there can be no greater injury to an infant than that he or she should be tied down to an unsuitable partner in life. This is the more so in the case of an infant whose law declares his marriage as indissoluble except by death. In England it is the uniform practice to require a guardian appointed by the Court to give a recognizance that the infant shall not marry without the leave of the Court. And in any case where there is the least suspicion that a marriage is likely to take place without the Court's sanction it issues an injunction not only to prevent such marriage but to prevent communication between the ward and the admirer and removes the infant from the custody of the guardian if he is suspected of connivance. There is no reason why the same rule should not prevail here. (Rupchand Bilaram and De Souza, A. J. Cs.). PREMJI KANJI v. JEEWIBAI. 108 I.C. 668=23 S.L.R. 75= A.I.R. 1928 Sind 129.

—S. 45—Accounts.

———The Court has no authority under S. 45 to demand payment from the guardian of any more than the balance shown due by the guardian's accounts as put in.

—S. 45—Applicability.

———Contumacious disobedience of Court's orders—Legal representative of guardian.

Section 45 is intended to punish wilful disobedience by the guardian of an order issued to him by the Court which it is within his power to comply with if he is so minded. Clause (c) places failure by the legal representative of a deceased guardian to deliver any property or account in his possession on the same footing as failure by the guardian himself to do the same. This clause therefore refers only to wilful non-compliance with what is within the competence of the person ordered to do which he has contumaciously declined to do and nothing more. (*Rupchand, A. GUARDIANS AND WARDS ACT (1890), S. 45—Order without enquiry.

—S. 45—Fine, imposition of.

———Legality.

A guardian put in a petition to the Court to the effect that he had collected some money belonging to the minor, which should be deposited at a proper rate of interest and that he would be responsible for it. The Court ordered that he should put the money in fixed deposit in a bank on a certain date on which the guardian appeared and stated that he had not brought the money as the mother of the minor did not wish it to be deposited in a bank but wished that it should be lent out at a higher rate of interest with the help of the minor who had reached the age of 18 years. Thereupon the Court at once fined the guardian Rs. 50 for not having carried out its orders and it further directed that he would be fined Rs. 10 a day until he deposited the money,

Held, that the Court had no power under S. 45 (1) (b), Guardians and Wards Act, to impose the fine in question. That section only authorizes a Court to impose a fine on a guardian if the guardian fails to pay into Court on a requisition under S. 34 (d) of the Act, the balance due on the account exhibited by him in compliance with a requisition under S.34 (c) and not for failure to deposit other moneys: 25 C. —S. 45—Minor not in custody of guardian.

———Where a guardian of a minor is appointed but the minor is in custody of a third person, no direction can be made under S. 12 (1) of the Act. The proper course is to direct the third person to compel the minor to return to the custody of her guardian in obedience to an order under S. 25 (1). In the absence of such an order an order imposing a fine on the third person is not correct. (B.B. Ghose and Bose, JJ.). KINU SUNDARI DEVI v. NARENDRA NATH. 111 I.C. 134=A.I.R. 1929 Cal. 27.

—S. 45—Order without enquiry.

———In order to enable the Court to impose the fine it must be shown that the sum for the non-payment of which the fine has been imposed was actually due from the guardian, and if the guardian represents that the sum is not due, no fine can be imposed unless it is ascertained as to whether the sum which he has been ordered to pay is really due from him.

On a previous occasion accounts were examined and certain amount was stated in the Dt. Judge's order to be due from the guardian, to the minor. The guardian continued as such for some time after. Then she was succeeded by another who in turn was succeeded by a third. To the intermediate guardian, the original guardian had paid a portion of the amount stated to be due from her.

GUARDIANS AND WARDS ACT (1890), S. 45—Powers of High Court.

When the guardian for the time being applied to realise the balance, the original guardian wanted to examine witnesses to show that the amount stated to be due from her included certain items which were actually realised not by her but by her successor in the office of guardianship. Her objection was overruled and eventually on her non-payment, she was fined,

Held, that the order, being one without any enquiry as regards the amount actually payable by the guardian, was improper. (Mullick and Kulwant Sahay, JJ.). MT. ABBASI BEGUM v. MT. YAQUTI BEGUM. 93 I. C. 628=4 Pat. 264=7 P.L.T. 473=A.I.R. 1925 Pat. 477.

Where the guardian of a minor was removed from the guardianship and was ordered by the Court to deliver possession to the new guardian of a certain house which was not included in the list of the minor's properties filed by him (the old guardian), and to which a third person laid claim and where he (the old guardian) was fined for disobedience of the order,

Held, Per Sulaiman, J.—In appeal against the order of fine it was open to the High Court to revise the previous order for delivery of possession if it found that it had been passed without any enquiry as to the title to the house,

Held, further that the District Judge could not in the proceedings under the Guardians and Wards Act compel the former guardian to hand over to the new guardian the house over which he never obtained possession as guardian of the minor and which he never admitted to belong to the minor.

Per Daniels, J.—Though the order for delivery of possession was not directly before the High Court and could not therefore be revised, the High Court was not precluded from taking notice of the fact that the order had been passed without any evidence on the record to show that the appellant was in possession on behalf of the minor. GUARDIANS AND WARDS ACT (1890), S. 47—Refusal to remove guardian.

———Testamentary guardian.

Where on an application to remove a testamentary guardian the order referred to non-applicant as the testamentary guardian, affirmed her fitness for the appointment and found against the conduct alleged, as disqualifying her for it,

Held, that all that was relevant to the prayer for her removal and did not amount to the making of a declaration, which was not made in terms, which neither party had asked for and which the lower Court was not conscious that it was considering.

The power to appoint a testamentary guardian and to make a will, were as regards any demonstrable or legitimate origin and until the Hindu Wills Act in 1870, on the same footing.

A Hindu can appoint a guardian of the person and property of his child by will when the property willed is his separate property.

There is nothing in law or reason or equity to prevent there being two guardians, one for person and another for the property. The Guardians and Wards Act expressly permits the appointment of more guardians than one—vide S. 15, Cls. (4) and (5). Where it is not permissible to appoint a guardian for the property of a minor, a guardian for the person alone can be appointed by testament: 19 Bom. 309, Foll.

Case-law reviewed and texts and history traced.

Per Devadoss, J.—It is the inherent right of a father to have the custody of his minor children and that right is transmissible by will or testament and there is nothing in the Hindu Law to prevent such transmission.

A father has power to appoint by will a guardian or the person of his minor children whether there be joint family property or not; and that right does not depend upon the father being able to devise by will any property to his children for whom he appoints a guardian. The violation of the procedure prescribed by S.31 (2) for recording the order granting the permission cannot be made the ground of brushing aside the finality of the order as enacted by S. 48. The only condition in which the finality prescribed by S. 48 can be avoided is to establish that the order granting the permission was a nullity.

An order passed by a Court in violation of such rules of procedure, however mandatory, as relate merely to the form of the order cannot be treated as a nullity. The omission to follow such rules of procedure can amount to no more than a mere irregularity or a material irregularity in the circumstances of a particular case. On the other hand, an order passed by a Court in violation of such rules of procedure the observance of which only invests the Court with jurisdiction to pass the order, is a nullity: 25 Bom. 337 (P.C.) and 42 Cal. 72 (P.C.), Foll. (Wazir Hasan and Neave, A.J.Cs.). A Gameti would have sovereign or quasi-sovereign rights, but to constitute a Mulgameti some retention of such sovereign or quasi-sovereign rights is not essential. If the Gameti retains or is re-granted some of his former lands or interest therein although all his former governing rights pass to others, he is still a Mulgameti. —Rent Controller.

———High Court has powers of superintendence.

High Court has power of superintendence and revisional jurisdiction as regards the Controller. The Controller, in discharging his duty under S. 15 and the President of the Tribunal in discharging his duties under S. 18 act as Courts of Justice. Whether they are Civil Courts within the meaning of any particular enactment is another question, but they are both Civil Courts in the general sense; they are authorized to decide judicially, and by judicial methods only, between persons seeking their civil rights. Such functions as they perform under Ss. 15 and 18 are neither administrative nor ministerial. (Rankin, J.). ALLEN BROS. & CO. v. BANDO & CO. 70 I. C. 371=49 Cal. 931=26 C. W. HIGHWAY.

—Blind alley.

———Ownership—Adjacent houses.

In the case of a blind alley the Court may presume that the ownership vests in the owners of the adjacent houses, but that presumption is not a presumption of law but an inference of fact: A.I.R. 1925 Bom. 27, Cons. (Dalip Singh, J.). The presumption that when a public thoroughfare is closed, the members of the public in —Dedication.

———Presumption from long user.

Where so far as living memory goes, a passage has been proved to have been used as a public cart road, the correct inference to be drawn is that it has been so used from time immemorial as a public highway, and dedication should be presumed from long user: A.I.R. 1920 P. C. 43, Rel. on. (Marten, C.J. and Murphy, J.). ARDESHIR JIVANJI v. AIMAI KUVARJI. 117 I.C. 513=53 Bom. 187=31 Bom. L.R. 97=A.I.R. 1929 Bom. 94.

———Lost grant, presumption of.

The existence of a prior dedication with regard to an ancient public way takes very much the nature of what is called a lost grant. It is entirely different in its legal attributes and in its origin from a private way or easement which may be acquired by prescription following upon continuous user. The public cannot acquire a public way by prescription, and where a public way is found and no traces are forthcoming of its origin the law presumes a dedication or a lost grant by the owner to whom the land belonged and who alone could dedicate it. (Wats, Ag.C.J. and Ryves, J.). MD. RAZA KHAN v. MD. ASKARI KHAN. 85 I.C. 304=46 All. 470=22 A.L.J. 729=6 L.R.A. Civ. 67=A.I.R. 1924 All. 599.

———Origin of roads.

From a long continued user of way by the public, an inference of dedication to the public can be drawn. In villages as well as in small towns in Oudh there is no doubt that the origin of highways may be traced to the fact that land used as highway was either nobody's or everybody's land. (Wazir Hasan, A.J.C.). RAI BAJRANG BAHADUR v. BABU BADRI NATH. 70 I.C. 74=9 O. L. J. 497=A.I.R. 1923 Oudh 26.

—English law of.

———Applicability.

It is very doubtful whether it would be right to bodily import the whole of the English law as to highways into cases relating to highways in India. (Wazir Hasan, A.J.C.). BAJRANG BAHADUR SINGH v. BADRI NATH BHARGAWA. 70 I.C. 74=9 O.L.J. 497=A.I.R. 1923 Oudh 26.

———Applicability.

It is sometimes dangerous to attempt to ascertain the law in India by the discussion of English cases. But in a matter where, legislation like the Municipalities Act, following closely upon English Local Government legislation, has left the matter at large, without following it up by modifying the general law on a topic such as public ways and highways the Courts in India are really enjoined to apply the English principles. (Walsh, Ag. C.J. and Ryves, J.). MD. RAZA KHAN v. MD. ASKARI KHAN. 85 I.C. 304=46 All. 470=22 A.L.J. 729=6 L.R.A. Civ. 67=A.I.R. 1924 All. 599.

—Music.

———Where a Hindu temple existed in a locality for a long time and the community had exercised the right to play music in it and also on the adjacent public street for a considerable length of time and subsequently the Mahomedans deliberately built their mosque cheek by jowl with the Hindu temple and sued the Hindus for a declaration restraining them from disturbing their worship.

Held, that the Hindus had the right to conduct processions with music so long as they did not interfere with the ordinary use of the street by the public and subject to the lawful directions by the Magistrates. That the right of the Mahomedans to stop the playing of music depends on the circumstances of each case and that they cannot claim to curtail the Hindus' right of service and music which has been customary long before the mosque was built: A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 36, Foll.; 2 Mad. 140, Expl. and 6 Mad. 203 (F.B.), Ref. (Wallace and Ananthakrishna Ayyar, JJ.). —Nuisance.

———Encroachment—Bona fide claim—Duty of Magistrate.

Encroachment upon a public road is an obstruction to the public path, and it is a nuisance in itself under S. 268 of the Penal Code. No length of user can justify an encroachment upon a public way. The question of a sufficient width of the road being left in support of the encroachment, for public use is no ground for allowing the encroachment or obstruction to continue. It is the duty of the Magistrate to come to a finding, whether the claim of the person complained of, to such encroachment, is bona fide or not, and question of possession is relevant for this purpose. (Jwala Prasad, J.). JAGROSHAN BHARTHI v. MADAN PANDE. 105 I.C. 238=6 Pat. 428=8 P.L.T. 452=8 A.I. Cr. R. 306=28 Cr. L. J. 910=A. I. R. 1927 Pat. 265.

—Private right.

———Access to public road from private property.

A right of immediate access from private property to public highway is recognised in law as a private right distinct from the rights of the owner of that property to use the highway itself as one of the public. Although the plaintiffs must show particular damage it is clear that a private right of this kind has been recognised as being particular damage in the case of individual members who had enjoyed access to the highway from adjoining property. (Mears, C. J. and Piggott, J.). HANUMAN PRASAD v. RAGHUNATH PRASAD AIR 82 I. C. 659= 46 All. 573=22 A.L.J. 568=5 L. R. A. Civ. 393= A.I.R. 1924 All. 715.

—Religious procession.

———Suit for declaration of right.

There is a right to conduct a religious procession with its appropriate observances along a highway. Persons of whatever sect are entitled to conduct religious processions through public streets so that they do not interfere with the ordinary use of such streets by the public and subject to such directions as the Magistrates may lawfully give to prevent obstructions of the thoroughfare or breaches of the public peace; and a suit lies for the declaration of such right. But claim by one sect, for the exclusive use of the highway for their worship is untenable: 2 Bom. 457, overruled.

The distinction between indictment and action in regard to what is done on a highway is a distinction peculiar to English Law and ought not to applied in India. (Lord Dunedin.) MANZUR HASSAN v. MUHAMMAD ZAMAN. 86 I.C. 236= 3 Pat. L.R. 300=23 A.L.J. 179=6 L.R.P.C. 34= 27 Bom. L.R. 170=21 M.L.W. 239= 6 P.L.T. 115=52 I.A. 61=29 C.W.N. 486= 2 O.W.N. 53=47 All. 151=A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 36= 48 M.L.J. 23 (P.C.).

———Persons of whatever sect, are entitled to conduct religious processions through public streets so that they do not interfere with the ordinary use of such streets, by the public and subject to such direction as the Magistrates may lawfully give to prevent obstructions of the thoroughfare or breaches of public peace: A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 36 and 5 Mad. 309, Foll. (Simpson, A.J.C.). DILLI v. KING EMPEROR. 89 I. C. 269= 2 O. W. N. 589=26 Cr. L. J. 1325= A.I.R. 1925 Oudh 656.

———Blocking passage.

Religious processions are lawful and legal and come within a proper user of the public highway and are always subject to the control of the District Magistrate and Police Officers. But primarily the purpose for which a highway is dedicated is that of passage. Any extensions thereof must be such as are not inconsistent with the maintenance of the paramount idea that the right of the public is that of passage. Hence a religious procession is not entitled, by frequent stops in a public street for the purpose of performing some religious rites, to block the passage in an unreasonable manner. (Tudball and Sulaiman, JJ.). MUHAMMAD ZAMAN v. MANZUR HASAN. 63 I. C. 984=43 All. 692= 19 A.L.J. 740=A. I. R. 1921 All. 146.

—Right of public.

———Any member of the public has got the right to use a public street in any lawful manner and a declaration can be granted if he is prevented from so doing without proof of any special damage: A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 36, Foll. (Krishnan and Odgers, JJ.). MALLIAH v. GANGANNA. 94 I.C. 226= A. I. R. 1926 Mad. 830.

HINDU DISPOSITION OF PROPERTY ACT (1916), S. 2—Retrospective effect.

—Special damage.

———Village pathway.

Infringement of a village pathway which is not a public pathway, in which the plaintiffs have a right along with the villagers, does not require proof of special damage to give rise to a cause of action: 23 C. W. N. 91 and 26 C. W. N. 587, Foll.; 25 C.W.N. 95, Dist. (Chakravarti, J.). SURESH-CHANDRA DUTTA v. JAMINI KANHATA. 96 I. C. 711=A. I. R. 1926 Cal. 1159.

———Village pathway.

The plaintiffs asked for declaration of a village pathway used by all the people of the village for certain specified purposes. The defendants contended that the alleged pathway was not a public highway but was a permissive foot track,

Held, that the suit was for the enforcement of a village pathway and no question of special damage arose in the case: 15 Cal. 460, Foll.

It is only in the case of a public highway that the question of special damage arises; where the case is one of a village pathway, there is no question of special damage: 23 C.W. N. 91, Ref. (Mookerjee and Rankin, JJ.). HARISH CHANDRA SAHA v. HARISH CHANDRA CHUCKERBUTTY. 80 I. C. 195=39 C. L. J. 347= A.I.R. 1923 Cal. 622.

———In an action for the removal of an obstruction of a public road, the mere fact that the plaintiffs would have to go a longer way round or that the road would be impassable for carts is not a finding that the plaintiff would suffer injury or damage peculiar to himself in any way different from the damage that would be suffered by other people who had hitherto used this road. The object of the rule requiring proof of special damage is that but for such a rule the defendants might be harassed by separate suits from every individual member of the public whose right of way has been obstructed. Special damage does not mean serious damage but means damage of a special nature, that is, damage affecting the plaintiff individually or damage peculiar to himself, his trade or calling. (Newbould and Panton, JJ.). BATIRAM KOLITA v. SIBRAM DAS. 61 I.C. 405=25 C.W.N. 96= A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 271.

———Village pathway.

A suit for a declaration that a pathway is a village pathway and for an injunction on the defendant to remove certain obstruction can proceed without proof of special damage: 23 C. W. N. 91. Foll. (Panton, J.). HARISH CHANDRA v. PRAN NATH. 69 I.C. 910=26 C.W.N. 587= A.I.R. 1921 Cal. 405.

—S. 2—Retrospective effect.

—Adoption—Affiliation.

———Affiliation deed declaring a boy as a son—Deed making no reference to executant's death—Document not styled as will—It does not make the son an adopted son.

An affiliation deed executed by the last male holder and which was relied upon to validate the adoption contained : "Further you, becoming a son to me, will be such an owner of all my properties as a son is." There was no reference to executant's death and the document was not styled as a will.

Held, that the clause cannot amount to a gift or transfer of all deceased's properties. At best, it contemplates that the alleged adopted son should be associated with him as a joint owner on the footing that both are members of a joint family. In the absence of an adoption, they cannot be members of a joint family, but may become tenants-in-common, i.e., the document might be a gift of an undivided half of the properties if there are appropriate words indicating gift : 12 L. W. 660, Dist. (Coutts-Trotter, C. J. and Ramesam, J.). SURAPPA v. SUNDARAMMA. 107 I. C. 141= A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 176.

—Adoption—Agreement.

———Kumaraswamy Sastri, J.—Adoptee a major—Agreement to pay widow's debts is legal—Agreement to give a share of property instead of paying debts—Legality of—(Odgers, J).—Adoption made with the sole desire of dividing the inheritance with the adopted son is invalid—(Odgers and Jackson, JJ.). Settlement with adopted son preserving half estate to widow is against Hindu Law. A. I. R. 1927 P. C. 139, Foll.

Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—If the adopted son is at the time of adoption a major capable of contracting, there is nothing illegal in the widow requiring the adopted son to pay her debts. If the adopted son, instead of undertaking the burden, thinks that it is in his interests to get an unburdened share of the estate and makes the widow to pay her debts out of any share allotted to her, the adoption would not be invalid as being made from a corrupt motive. The case may be different if the widow had not debts to pay or if the proportion of the estate granted to her was so disproportionate to the debts that the Court can on the evidence treat it as a device pure and simple by the widow under the guise of an adoption to get a large share of her husband's estate to herself: A.I.R. 1927 P. C. 139, Rel. on.

HINDU LAW—Adoption—Agreement.

Odgers, J.—As in the case of a surrender by a widow to a reversioner, so in an adoption, the operation must not be a mere device to divide the estate with the reversioner. An adoption is invalid if it is made with a corrupt motive namely, the sole desire of dividing the inheritance with the adopted son. (Kumaraswami Sastri, Odgers and Jackson, JJ.). KRISHNAYYA RAO v. RAJAH OF PITTAPUR. 116 I.C. 673=51 Mad. 893= 28 M.L.W. 422= A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 994= 55 M.L. J. 894 (F.B.).

———Agreement to secure benefit to widow's friends or relatives is not legal. (Mears, C. J.)—If adoptee is major, such agreement is binding (Sulaiman, J.).

Mears, C.J.—A Hindu widow when making an adoption can impose stipulations which are reasonable and proper for her own protection; agreements for maintenance, and at times management of the property are deemed as valid. But a widow cannot be permitted to benefit her own relatives and friends and bargain for money or property to be made over to them as a condition of the adoption. She is not entitled in law to propose any arrangement in favour of her relatives which could diminish the value of the ancestral estate.

Per Sulaiman, J.—Even if the adopting widow has no power to impose conditions on her would-be adopted son, the adopted son, if of age is not prevented from undertaking a liability on himself for consideration of being adopted. Adoption of an adult by a Jain widow—Adopted son, a poor man, getting large property on account of adoption—Agreement by the adoptee as condition precedent to adoption, to give some property to widow's brothers is binding as being supported by good consideration. (Lindsay, J., dissenting).

Per Lindsay, J.—A Hindu widow, about to make an adoption to her husband cannot stipulate for gifts of her husband's estate to be made to her relations and to strangers by the adopted son after he is taken in adoption. She cannot make the adoption upon the adopted son's agreeing to carry out her directions to make such gifts. To allow an arrangement of this nature to be carried out would be to allow the Hindu widow to do indirectly what the Hindu Law forbids her to do directly ; and no such arrangement can be enforced. Any attempt to bind the adopted son by such conditions must fail; the conditions are void and the son takes the estate free from them. An adoptive father can at the time of adopting a son impose such conditions as he thinks fit upon the enjoyment of his property by the adopted son. A widow, however, stands in a very different position. It is legitimate for a widow on such occasions to impose conditions for her own benefit provided they are reasonably designed for her own protection. The widow, although the estate is divested from her by the act of adoption, is nevertheless entitled to maintenance and may for that purpose make provision for the protection of the estate in her own interest. The question in all cases is whether the stipulations are reasonable. If they are unreasonable, such as giving the widow absolute powers of disposition over the property, they should be rejected. In the United Provinces the consent of the husband is essential for an adoption by a widow, and while consent so given would justify the widow in imposing reasonable conditions for the protection of herself and the estate from which she is entitled to draw maintenance, it would not be readily assumed that the husband consented to arrangements made by the widow at the time of adoption whereby extensive portions of his estate could be transferred by way of gift to the members of his wife's family. The invalidity of such conditions cannot be cured by showing that the adopted son, a person of full age, assented to them. The invalidity arises out of the inherent disability of the widow under the Hindu Law to give away portions of her husband's estate and an attempt to impose conditions which would lead indirectly to such alienations being made is absolutely void as being ultra vires. Even if it can be deduced from the language of the deeds in the case that all the formalities necessary to the execution of a deed of trust had been carried out, the purpose of the trust being unlawful the trust could not be enforced. Per Spencer, Offg. C.J.—If an adoption and a disposition of his property by the adoptive father form part of one transaction, the adopted son never acquires any interest in the property disposed of and no question can arise as to his guardian's competency to deal with it.

Per Kumaraswamy Sastri, J.—Where an adoption is made by a Hindu who at the time of adoption had absolute power of disposal over the property, an agreement between the natural father and the adoptive father as regards alienations which the adoptive father wants to make either by a document inter vivos or by will binds the adopted son in all cases where such an agreement would be for his benefit. There is no reason why the rights of the boy to be adopted should be tested with reference to what his position in the family would be after the adoption and to see whether the adoptive father could, after the adoption, have made the alienations which are disputed. The right of a Hindu father to give his son in adoption is not governed by any questions of benfit to the adopted boy. For it is perfectly competent to the natural father to give his boy in adoption to a pauper and thus deprive his son of any interest in the natural father's property. If the adopting father would not make the adoption but for the conditions agreed to by the natural father and if in spite of those conditions the adopted son would be benefitted, there is no reason why the transaction should not be tested like any other agreement entered into by the natural father as guardian of his own son. ———Natural father consenting—Validity of—Agreements are valid by custom to the extent of creating life-interest in adopting widow even in whole property.

But it is quite different when the adoption is antecedent to the date at which the disposition is meant to take effect. The rights which flow from adoption are immediate, and the disposition, if given effect to, is inconsistent with these rights and cannot of itself vi propria affect them. In such cases, it is impossible to ascribe any value to the guardianship power of the natural father to bind the son as to property, in which he cannot have an interest until the time when the guardianship has ceased, nor can the case be solved by the doctrine of approbate and reprobate, for the doctrine of approbate and reprobate assumes election and the adopted son has no election. He cannot undo the adoption and be as he was. The same fact destroys the idea of conditional adoption. The adoption cannot be undone : it cannot, therefore, be conditional.

The only ground on which such arrangement can be sanctioned is custom and it seems that custom has sanctioned such arrangements in so far as they regulate the right of the widow as against the adopted son. It seems part of the custom that one sine qua non of such arrangement should be the consent of the natural father as showing that the arrangement is for the advantage of the boy, and that the mere postponement of his interest to the widow's interest, even though it should be one extending to a life-interest in the whole property, is not incompatible with his position as son.

As soon however, as the arrangements go beyond that, i.e., either give the widow property absolutely or give the property to strangers, it seems that no custom as to this has been proved to exist and that such arrangements are against the radical view of the Hindu Law. It cannot be laid down as a general proposition that all arrangements, consented to by a natural father, and of benefit to the boy, in the sense that half a loaf being better than no bread, he is better with an adoption with truncated rights than with no adoption at all, are valid: Opinion of Farran, J., in 11 Bom. 381, Not appr. ; 2 Mad. 91 (P.C.) and 16 Cal. 556 (P.C.), Expl. and Dist. (Bombay and Madras cases discussed.) (Viscount Dunedin.) KRISHNAMURTY v. KRISHNAMURTY. 101 I.C. 779=50 Mad. 508=29 Bom. SRINAGAR (Kashmir)

HINDU LAW—Adoption—Authority—Consent.

The position of the next sapindas whose consent is necessary is that they are, by virtue of the relationship, competent advisers of the widow and proper Judges of the propriety of the act of the widow in making the adoption. Where a sapinda sets up an agreement between his father and the widow's husband which according to him prohibits an adoption even when such a contention has been set up by his father in a previous litigation and negatived and persists in this objection and where he says he is not going to give up his reversionary right to succeed by consenting to the adoption the sapinda cannot be a competent Judge of the propriety of the widow's act or a competent adviser. If the position of the sapindas is that of a domestic forum then the moment one of the Judges takes up the grounds above mentioned as reason for the dissent he ceases to be one who could be a member of the forum and the widow is entitled to look to the consent of other sapindas. The fact that he would lose the estate if an adoption was made and the fact that the boy chosen is a son of his enemy would not render his grounds of objection to give consent proper.

Odgers, J.—The law has set up what may be called a domestic tribunal, namely the sapindas, who are to judge as to the contemplated action of the widow in making the adoption. Their decision or at least their refusal is only to be canvassed if the refusal is obviously improper. A sapinda is entitled to show that if the adoption is not undertaken with any honest or spiritual purpose, it is undertaken out of spite with a view to put him to loss and make a gain for the adopter since he is thereby merely amplifying or explaining his grounds for asserting that there is no honest purpose in the adoption.

Jackson, J.—If a sapinda has for good reason refused his consent, it is not for the Courts to go behind his action, by introducing principles of equity which in other circumstances may prevail in England.

It cannot be said that a sapinda's judgment is vitiated from the outset on account of his personal interest. So long as he has exercised a reasonable judgment, and is not actuated by motives of fraud or corruption, his decision must be respected. (Kumaraswami Sastri, Odgers and Jackson, JJ.). ———Sapindas—Refusal of consent—Corrupt motives, what are—Motive of widow—Nearest Sapindas even in number—Court to decide the propriety of refusal of consent.

In the Dravida country a Hindu widow not having her husband's authority may nevertheless, if authorized by the consent of his kinsmen, validly adopt a son to him.

So far as sapindas are concerned, all the nearest ones must be consulted, but if any one of them gives or refuses his consent from corrupt or malicious motives his action may be ignored.

Whatever weight might be attached to the religious benefits flowing from an adoption, the secular rights flowing from it cannot be ignored : A.I.R. 1918 P.C. 97, Rel. on.

No doubt, the question is to be decided by the opinion of the majority of the sapindas, but it must be by a majority of the nearest sapindas and there must be such a substantial majority as to justify the conclusion that the adoption is proper and is made in the bona fide performance of a religious duty. If the refusal to consent of the dissenting minority is shown to be based upon proper and valid grounds, the mere fact of a majority being in favour of the adoption should not prevail.

In a case where there are only two nearest sapindas, one assenting and one dissenting, no question of majority comes in. If the dissent of the dissenting sapinda is shown to be unreasonable, it may be ignored, and the assent of one alone would be sufficient to validate the adoption. But if, on the other hand, the objection is well founded, the adoption cannot be supported.

The objection that the adoption would deprive the kinsman of his inheritance is a personal one and such an objection is not a valid one : 39 Mad. 77 and 2 L.W. 284, Rel. on.

Per Venkatasubba Rao, J.—The very essence of the rule of consent is that the sapindas are presumed to be capable of forming an honest judgment, although in the very nature of things they are interested parties. Therefore the consent of a sapinda cannot be discounted on the ground that he is the natural father of the boy.

The reason for requiring the consent of the nearest among the sapindas is that it is their reversionary interest that is affected by the adoption (A I.R. 1926 Mad. 881, Foll), and as the sapindas' right to be consulted depends upon the measure of their proprietary (or quasi-proprietary) right, it stands to reason that in regard to consenting to an adoption, the position of the aurasa son and the adopted son must be alike, their rights to property being equal.

When a man has sons, the latter do not equally with their father fall in the group of the nearest sapindas: A.I.R. 1918 P.C. 97 and A.I R. 1920 P.C. 4, Expl.

The refusal to consent, because the reversionary interest of the sapinda will be prejudiced can in no circumstances be justified, nor can the fact that the boy is the son of his longstanding enemy.

If the number of the nearest sapindas is even, the Court will in such cases be called on to decide the propriety or the bona fides of the dissent. The assenting kinsmen are not required to justify their assent: for the adoption is a meritorious act and it is presumed that the assent was properly given, but if it is proved in such cases that the dissenting kinsmen were actuated by corrupt or malicious motives their dissent must be disregarded: 2 Mad. 202; 30 Mad. 50 (P.C.) and 26 Mad. 627, Rel. on. (Case-law fully discussed.) (Krishnan and Venkatasubba Rao, JJ.). Where the consent is given to the widowed daughter-in-law by her father-in-law who happens to be the nearest sapinda then living, his death, before the adoption is made, would not ipso facto revoke the consent. Such a consent will come to an end only if circumstances had materially changed after his death.

Where in such a case there had been no change in the circumstances on the date the adoption was made, either by the coming into existence of other nearer sapindas, or by the death of sapindas then alive, or by reason of the estate having vested in third persons; and five sapindas were alive on the date of the adoption and the boy adopted was the son of one of them and his natural father was present at the adoption; another sapinda assisted the widow during the ceremony and a third was present; but the 4th and 5th sapindas were on that date in their houses in the village and did not in any way indicate to the widow that they objected to the adoption.

There is an essential difference between the authority of the husband and the assent of a sapinda. The former is intended to be exercised only after the death of the husband. The latter is intended to be used at a reasonable time, after the consent is given. When the interval is short, the death of the sapinda may not matter; but a sapinda's assent is not to be pocketted by the widow and used long after it was given, when entirely different considerations as to the expediency of the adoption may apply. The right of the Court to scrutinise the kinsmen's reasons extends only where consent is refused and not where consent is given inasmuch as the law imposes a responsibility upon kinsmen in granting their consent to an adoption. A daughter's son is not entitled to be consulted regarding an adoption by a widow who has obtained the consent of the nearest sapindas, as he is not a gnati, and Bhinnagotra sapindas are not included under the terms sapindas in the texts which require their consent to an adoption. Consent of the sapindas to an adoption by the widow is material as guaranteeing the propriety of the widow's action in making the adoption. The Courts should not be astute to defeat an adoption but should rather do their utmost to support it unless it is clearly in excess or in breach of the power.

In a written permission to adopt there was a clear intention that an adoption was necessary. If a specified person was not adopted, another was to be adopted with the consent of the father-in-law. But there was no penalty attaching to the failure to take the consent. The father-in-law died and afterwards an adoption was made.

When the general intention of a Hindu to be represented by an adopted son is clear, there is no reason why effect should not be given to such intention, if it is possible to do so without contravening the law. At any rate, the Court will not be astute to defeat the intention of the testator, and all powers are to be liberally construed in furtherance of the purpose for which they were created. But, where special reasons exist for placing restrictions on the authority, and special instructions are given for the guidance of the wife and restriction is placed on the authority, they are to be strictly followed.

Held, further, that inasmuch as the contestants of the adoption had failed to prove that the man had been seen attending to his ordinary avocations during the period when the opposite party asserted he had been suffering and as other circumstances left the matter entirely in doubt, there was not evidence of sufficient cogency to interfere with the judgment of the High Court which was to the effect that the adoption had been authorized. A Kaifiyat, expressing consent to the adoption, alleged to have been executed by the mother-in-law of the adoptive mother was produced to serve as proof of the instructions of her husband, but its execution by her was not proved. The ceremony of adoption was performed under suspicious circumstances and the mother-in-law, who had nothing to do with it and had applied for mutation in her name, was absent,

Held, that on the facts the adoption was invalid. It is improbable that a boy of fifteen would think of adoption or his father would agree to his wishes leaving aside his own wife or widow of his elder son. (Kotval and Prideaux, A.J.Cs.). GOVIND v. RADHABAI. 68 I.C. 325=A.I.R. 1923 Nag. 7.

———Father-in-law cannot authorise daughter-in-law to adopt—Consent by sapinda cannot be given by way of will.

There is no authority for holding that a father-in-law can authorise his daughter-in-law to adopt under the Hindu Law; the only way in which a widow can adopt is either by the authority of her husband or by the consent of her nearest sapindas given bona fide and honestly. No sapinda is entitled to give by way of a Will to take effect after his death, a consent to an adoption by a widow: The consent has to be given with reference to the circumstances attendant upon the proposed adoption and usually at the request of the widow: 36 Mad. 145, Ref. (Krishnan and Ramesam, JJ.). —Adoption—Burden of proof.

——Onus rests heavily on person setting up adoption.

Very grave and serious onus rests upon a person who seeks to displace the natural succession of property by the act of an adoption. In such a case the proof requires strict and almost severe scrutiny and the longer the time goes back from the date when the power was given to the time when it comes to be examined, the more necessary it is having regard to the fallibility of human memory and the uncertainty of evidence given after the lapse of such time, to see that the evidence is sufficient and strong. It is the duty of the person who asserts that an adoption had been performed, to prove it. ——Hindu governed by Bombay School dying leaving a widow and widow of predeceased son—The latter cannot adopt after the widow's death although the estate may vest in her.

Where the last male holder dies leaving a nearer heir other than the adopting widow, the latter's power of adoption comes to an end, as soon as his estate is vested in the nearer heir, and is incapable of being revived at any future date.

Where a Hindu governed by the Bombay School dies leaving behind him his widow and a widowed daughter-in-law, the power of the daughter-in-law to adopt to her husband comes to an end by the vesting of the estate in the widow and does not revive again by the death of the widow. Where a son dies after attaining majority but without leaving a son or a widow, the mother can adopt another son with the consent of the sapindas. Under the Hindu Law a minor can marry to get legitimate sons and his widow can adopt to him, so that, even a minor may fulfil the tests laid down in that case though he has not yet come into full disposing possession of his estate. A Hindu widow who succeeds to an estate, not her husband's, but as a gotraja sapinda of the last male holder in consequence of the absence of nearer heirs, cannot make a valid adoption. It cannot be said therefore that the decision of High Court, that a widow of a gotraja sapinda cannot adopt so as to defeat the rights of the reversioners has in any way been shaken by the decision in Yadho v. Namdeo, A I.R. 1922 P.C. 216.

Held, that the adoption was not valid, as the adoptive mother, the second widow had no authority from her husband; and the absence of any relinquishment by the senior wife of her prior right to adopt invalidates the adoption by the junior wife,

Held, further the verses in the Mitakshara clearly prove the superior position of the senior widow and her right to adopt follows as an inference in the absence of prohibition, which leaves the senior widow free to exercise the right which she has according to the Sastras.

The dwyamushyayana form of adoption under which the boy adopted, while acquiring the relationship of a son to his adoptive father, retains also his relationship to his natural father, is entirely unknown to the Punjab, and in the absence of a specific plea to this effect, it cannot be held that when the defendant pleaded that he had been adopted, he had meant that he had been adopted in any form other than the ordinary dattaka form which is generally prevalent among the Punjab Hindus in this province.

———Question of adoption is one of status—Law of domicile governs.

Per Phillips, J.—Adoption creates definite relationship between the person adopted and the person adopting and a question relating to its validity is akin to a case of legitimacy. In both the right of a person to be declared as the legal son of a father is involved. Adoption naturally carries with it rights to property but the main element in adoption is a religious element; for, the status conferred by adoption involves religious obligations and it is usually for the performance of such religious obligations that the adoption is effected. The question of adoption is consequently a question relating to the status of the parties and is governed by the law of domicile. (Phillips and Reilly, JJ.). ———Natural brother cannot succeed to adopted son's estate in the adoptive family.

It is not true to say that by Hindu law an adoptee only loses his consanguinity for purposes of succession. Adoption has been spoken of as "new birth" in many cases, a term sanctioned by the theory of Hindu law. The theory itself involves the principle "of a complete severance of the child adopted from the family in which he is born. . . and complete substitution into the adoptive family, as if he were born in it: A.I.R. 1915 P.C. 41, Ref.

Consideration of the intimate connexion, which primitive Hindu Laws established between the funeral offerings and ceremonies on behalf of the dead and the right of succession to his property will show that ceremonially the adopted son only becomes new born in the family of his adoptive father, so as to be qualified to provide efficaciously the offerings of which the dead have need, by first dying in the family of his birth, out of which he is given by his natural to his adoptive parent, and in which his offering will be no longer efficacious or desired. Therefore, when such an adopted son dies, his natural brother cannot succeed to him to his estate in the adoptive family being still a member of the family of his birth and bound to make the necessary offerings for his own ancestors and thus not qualified to do the same thing for his brother and his adoptive father and that father's immediate predecessors. ———Adopted son loses all rights in natural family including right to inherit to natural relations.

It is a well established principle of the Mitakshara law that an adoption in the dattaka form has the effect of transferring the adopted boy from his natural into the adoptive family and consequently of losing all his rights of a son in his natural family including the right of claiming any share in the estate of his natural relations. The only tie or affinity that such a boy retains with his natural family is that he cannot marry in it within the prohibited degree nor can he adopt from that family a boy whom he could not have adopted if he had remained in that family. ———Wife not actually receiving can be adoptive mother.

There appears to be no authority for the proposition that the wife does not become the adoptive mother unless she actually receives the boy.

Per Madhavan Nair, J.—The wife becomes the adoptive mother, not because she receives the boy in adoption, but because she is the wife of the adopter, her husband, who takes the boy in adoption.

Per Phillips, J.—A Hindu son has to offer oblations not only to his father's ancestors, but also to his mother's ancestors. When therefore, he is adopted into a new family, he becomes the son of that family and presumably he would offer oblations not only to his adoptive father's ancestors but to his father's wife's ancestors as well. It would be straining the legal fiction of adoption too far to hold that the boy need have no mother at all, although this may possibly be necessary in the case of an adoption by a bachelor. Wherever possible, therefore, a mother should be found for the boy, and the fact that such a mother died before the adoption can be no obstacle in view of the fictitious character of the whole principle of adoption : Case-law considered. (Phillips and Madhavan Nair, JJ.). The practice of illatom is a departure from ordinary Hindu Law, and accordingly it lies upon the party claiming by virtue of the statute to override the provisions of that law to substantiate his claim. This cannot in general be done, as, for instance, can be done in a case of adoption, by appeal to settled rules of law because the practice of illatom being of late occurrence and confined to certain castes, has never become crystallized into fixed rules of law by a long course of judicial decisions. Where therefore, a father-in-law takes a son-in-law in illatom, and subsequently alienates some of his property, it lies heavily upon the illatom son-in-law to show that by specific customary law overriding the general Hindu law, he has a preferential right to the rights of father in-law's alienees: 4 Mad. 272; 21 Mad. 266; 9 Mad. 114; A I.R. 1927 Mad. 708; 7 M. In the case of adoption by widow the doctrine of relation back has nothing to do with a last male holder. A sole surviving co-parcener in possession of property has always been regarded as the owner of the co-parcenary property, the theory of relation back has only to do with establishing a line of succession to the adoptive father and in order to establish that line, it is necessary that certain intermediate holders should give way to the adopted son's superior claims as that of a natural born son of his adoptive father. He can so to speak insist on the property devolving in a direct line as far as possible from father to son or from grand-father to grand-son and it is in this connexion and this alone that the doctrine of relation back is to be regarded. status in his natural family and who is liable to be defeated in his adoptive family by the birth of a natural born son. The modern text books refer to the adoption of a karta putra as an adoption in the kritrima form ; but this is not quite correct. All that is necessary is the consent of the adoptee, which involves the adoptee being an adult. He does not lose the rights of inheritance in his natural family, and takes the inheritance of his adoptive father, but not of his father's father or other collateral relations nor of the wife of his adoptive father or her relations. It is no part of the contract that the adoptee should succeed to the estate left by his adoptive father. A dattak son who loses his status in his natural family has no absolute right to the estate of his adoptive father. He is liable to be defeated by a gift inter vivos or by a devise made by his father in favour of another person. He is also liable to be defeated, if not absolutely, certainly to the extent of important shares in the estate by the birth of a natural born son subsequent to the adoption. Succession to the estate of the adoptive father is not inherent in the status of a karta putra. When a natural born son is in existence he is entitled to exclude every other kind of son from sharing with him in the estate of his father: 1 Sel. The rights of the adopted son, unless curtailed by express texts, are in every respect the same as those of a natural-born son and an adoption, so far as the continuity of the line of inheritance is concerned, has a retrospective effect.

In cases of competition between an adopted son and an illegitimate son of a Sudra, it would be unreasonable and against all precedents, in computing the shares, to treat the illegitimate sons as legitimate, presume that the adoption was after the birth of the illegitimate son, add to it the consequence that the adoption is invalid and hold that the illegitimate son could therefore get the whole property and then it should be divided by halves so as to give the illegitimate son and the adopted son equal shares. The proper course is to assume the adopted son to be in the same position as a natural-born son, imagine the illegitimate sons to be legitimate, assume that they can coexist with the legitimate sons, see what shares they would get on that footing, and give the illegitimate sons one-half of it. ———Adoption by daughter-in-law to her husband—Adopted son succeeds to the estate of his adoptive grand-father.

When a Hindu offers the sacrificial cake or pinda, he secures the advancement of the spirit of the father grand-father and great-grand-father, each to an equal degree; and no offerings by any other descendant or by any collateral are of the same order of efficacy. When a son is adopted his offering of the pinda to his adoptive father, and to his adoptive grand-father and great-grand-father, are as efficacious as the offerings of a natural son; and for this reason he is entitled to succeed to share in the family property, as if he were a begotten son. Where, therefore, an adoption secures to the spirit of the last male holder of an estate, that advancement, otherwise lacking, which is given by the offering of the pinda, then the imposition of pious duties on the adopted person should carry with it the legal rights to succeed to the estate of the last male-holder. But this broad principle is subject to the following equitable restrictions :

(1) That the estate is not already vested by inheritance in a person other than the adopting widow, or her co-widows.

(2) That if the estate is a share in an estate held by co-parceners the consent of the co-parceners is necessary.

Where the last male holder dies in exclusive possession of his estate, and his estate vests directly in his daughter-in-law, her husband, (i. e., the son of the last holder) having pre-deceased the last holder, her adopting a son to her husband makes the adopted son, an heir to the last holder: 14 Bom. 463 ; 20 Bom. 250 ; 21 Bom. 319 ; 26 Bom. 526, Ref.; A. ———Adopted son cannot succeed to his natural maternal grand-fathers' property.

The theory of adoption involves the principle of a complete severance of the child adopted from the family in which he is born, both in respect to the paternal and the maternal line and therefore, the adopted son cannot succeed to the property of his maternal grandfather in his natural family: 10 I.A. 138, Ref. (*Macleod, C. ———Aura son's right to challenge adoption—Nature of.

The case of the aurasa son of an adoptive father stands on a different footing, from that of a reversioner. The cause of action is one and the same whatever may be the number of the reversioners. But the case of an aurasa son is altogether different, for the adoption affects him as it affects no one else: for if the adoption is held valid his right to the family property would be cut down under the Hindu Law. But if the adoption is held to be not valid then he would succeed to the whole of the family property. Therefore decisions which relate to suits by reversioners would not apply.

The mere fact that the father who made the illegal adoption was alive for more than six years after the adoption would not bar the right of a son born a year or two after the adoption to question it.

Son's right to challenge the adoption is quite independent of that of the father. (Devadoss, J.). SIDDA REDDI v. DEVA JAYARAMI REDDI.

Considering the genius of Hindu Law and what may be considered as the custom and consciousness of the community at large, at any rate in South India, it will be more in accordance with the reason of the thing to regard the adoption in such a case as having been made by and to the senior widow or the dharmapatni The junior widow becomes only the step-mother of the adoptee. —Adoption—Widow—Motive.

———Adoption out of religious motives and for personal gain—Adoption valid—Arrangement for personal gain void.

Kumaraswami Sastri, J.—The adoption is a religious sacrament, according to Hindu law-givers, as a marriage. The necessity for the adoption of a son in the case of childless Hindus is insisted upon as an act necessary for their salvation and is looked upon as very meritorious. Secular motives do come into play and influence persons in making adoption. Where an adoption is made by a widow both in fulfilment of her religious duties and also for the purpose of getting a gain for herself, the proper thing is to hold that the adoption would be valid while any arrangement for her personal benefit if not within the limits actually allowed by law, would be void. (Kumaraswami Sastri, Odgers and Jackson, JJ.). KRISHNAYYA RAO v. RAJAH OF PITTAPUR. 116 I.C. 673=51 Mad. 893= 28 M.L.W. 422= A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 994=55 M.L.J. 894 (F.B.).

———Widow's motive is not irrelevant in Madras.

Jackson, J.—Considering that adoption is only a method by which a married couple can have a child it may seem incongruous that a Court of law should concern itself with the underlying motive, and question whether it was caprice or corruption. That incongruity however disappears when the other aspect of adoption is considered, namely, a method by which the holder of a life interest can interrupt the normal succession, and confer an absolute estate. Sapindas do not merely affirm the conduct of the widow; they pronounce a decision in their own right as persons having an interest in the protection of the inheritance; and in this view if no such decision has been pronounced, owing to an equal division between the sapindas, there can be no adoption and there is no need for the Court to go further and inquire itself into the widow's motive. But in Madras, it cannot be said that the widow's motive is entirely irrelevant, either as ———Motive of widow in making adoption—If material.

The corrupt motive of the widow in making the adoption cannot be relied on by the Court to declare the adoption invalid, although it would certainly be a very proper ground for a kinsman to consider when he is called upon by the widow for his consent, he would be justified in refusing his assent if he finds that the widow's motive in proposing the adoption is in part at least corrupt or improper: 22 Bom. 558, Foll.

When it is shown that the widow has sought the advice of her kinsman, the Court must not embark upon an enquiry as to what the motives of the widow are in seeking consent. A duty is cast upon the widow to apply for consent and, when she performs that duty, her act cannot be questioned on the ground that her motives were bad. It is for the kinsmen who are called on to grant consent to examine the motives and where it is found that effective consent has been granted, the Court will treat that as the decision of a domestic tribunal and will not trouble to canvass the propriety of the consent. Per Crump, J.—Their Lordships of the Privy Council have laid it down as a correct rule of law that the widow of a Hindu in the Maratha country of the Presidency of Bombay has, where there is no prohibition by the deceased husband, an inherent right to adopt which is not subject to any of those limitations which have hitherto been placed upon it.

Per Madgavkar, J.—In so far as the observations of Westropp, J. on a review of Hindu authorities in (1866) 7 B.H.C.R. App. laid down that the husband's refusal in his lifetime, and even on the day preceding his death, to adopt a son was tantamount to a positive prohibition to the widow to adopt after his death, their Lordships of the Privy Council in Yadao v. Namdeo, A.I.R. 1922 P.C., 216, held that whatever the case in other parts of India, in the Maratha country these observations of Westropp, J., have no application; and they prefer the decision and the principles in (1868) 5 B.H.C.R. (A.C.J.) 181 as applicable to the fact in Yadao v. Namdeo, A.I.R. 1922 P. C. 216. The decision in Yadao v. Namdeo, A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 216, has not in any way affected the main point of the principle in Ramji v. Ghamau, 6 Bom. 498 (F.B.), viz., the necessity of the consent of the undivided co-parceners for a valid adoption by a widow in a joint family made without the authority of her husband.

In a family which is undivided at the time of her husband's death but which is subsequently separated in status, even though the property is not actually partitioned, a Hindu widow in the Maratha country can, after the separation in status, and when the property vests in her and her co-widow, adopt without the consent of the collaterals, so long as there is no prohibition, express or implied, by the deceased husband to that particular adoption. Absence of express authority, or refusal to adopt in his lifetime, is not of itself a prohibition in the Maratha country. (Macleod, C.J., Shah, Crump, Madgavkar and Coyajee, JJ.). The property of a certain Raja was confiscated by the Government on his death. Subsequently, the Government relinquished the estate to the heirs of the Raja and conveyed the same to the Raja's senior widow. She was to manage the property and to provide for the participative enjoyment of the other widows, described by the grant as "co-heirs." Upon the death of the last surviving widow the Raja's daughter and failing her, the next heirs of the Raja were to inherit the property. After the grant had taken place, the senior widow adopted a son to her husband,

Held, that under the circumstances of the case there had been no escheat to the Government: but if there had been such escheat, the widow's right of adoption of a son for spiritual purposes was unfettered,

Held, further that the grant did not prohibit the adoption or show any intention to exclude the adoptee from inheriting the property, though the adoption could not disturb the arrangements taking place under the terms of the grant. —Alienation — Co-parcener — Rights of purchaser.

———Transferee has no right for separate possession —Suit for general partition must be filed—When prayer for separate possession can be granted.

A transferee of an undivided interest of a member of a co-parcenary has no right to separate possession of his purchase except by a partition of the whole estate belonging to the family claimed in a properly constituted suit for partition to which all proper persons are impleaded as parties.

In the absence of anything on record to show that the array of parties is complete in the sense that there are no other members in the family for whom any provision either by way of maintenance or marriage portions has not to be made in the event of partition, and in the absence of any material to show that all the equities and right of all persons interested can be settled, the request for a grant of a decree for separate possession after the partition of the entire estate cannot be granted in a suit for possession by the purchaser: 9 N.L.R. 18, Foll. (Kinkhede, A.J.C.). HINDU LAW—Alienation—Co-parcener—Setting aside.

———Suit to set aside alienation should not be converted into one for general partition—Alienee must file separate partition suit and both may be tried together to obviate possible plea of res judicata.

It is not competent for the Court in a suit by a co-parcener for setting aside an alienation of a certain item of family property to grant relief which it would grant on a general partition. The proper course for the alienee would be to sue for partition and ask the Court to allot to his alienor the specific property conveyed to him and if the Court finds that the interests of the other co-parceners would not be prejudiced by allotting to the alienating co-parcener the specific property alienated by him the Court may allow the alienee to retain the property. His suit for partition is not barred by res judicata by reason of a previous suit for setting aside the alienation. If both the suits are tried together there would not be any difficulty at all, as the possible plea of res judicata can then be obviated: A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 112, Affirmed; 43 Dom. 17, Rel. on; A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 241, Diss. from. (Devadoss and Waller, JJ.). In such a case, if the members are divided and the alienor leaves other heirs than the members who question the transaction, he or his heirs may have a right to contribution, and (3) where the consideration proved exceeds the value of the alienor's share, the transaction may be upheld as sale of the alienor's share only and for the excess a charge may be given over the shares of the other members: 26 M.L.J. 604 and A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 1116, Not foll.; 37 Mad. 435, Diss. from; (1917) M.W.N. 273, Dist; 27 Mad. 162, Rel. on. (Kumaraswamy Sastry and Ramesam, JJ.). ———Right of a son born after alienation explained.

A son cannot object to alienations validly made by his father before he was born or begotten because he can only by birth obtain an interest in property which was then existing in his ancestor. Hence if at the time of the alienation there has been no one in existence whose assent was necessary or if those who were then in existence have consented, he cannot afterwards object on the ground that there was no necessity for the transaction. On the other hand, if the alienation was made by a father without necessity and without the consent of the sons then living it would not only be invalid against them but also against any son born before they had ratified the transaction and no consent given by them after his birth would render it binding upon him. The reason of the thing is not of course that the unborn son has any right in the family property at the time of the alienation but that on his birth he acquires a share in the family properties as it then stands. If a previous alienation of any portion of the family properties was validated by consent or failure to set it aside in time on the part of the other members of the family then in existence, the property in which he acquires a share at birth is diminished to the extent of the portion thus alienated. If the alienation was invalid he acquires a share in the whole property including the portion purported to be alienated, not because the alienation was an invasion of his rights, for he had none, but because it was bad in itself and did not diminish the corpus of the joint family property: A. ———Debts mentioned in the deed fictitious—But vendee paying off real antecedent debts—Sale is valid.

Per Sulaiman, J.—Antecedent debts of the father unless tainted with immorality or illegality are binding on the sons, and a transfer in lieu of them is perfectly valid. It does not make any difference in principle if a portion of the sale consideration though originally intended to pay off one antecedent debt, is as a matter of fact, when it is discovered that that debt does not exist, honestly utilized to pay off another antecedent debt. When both the debts are binding on the sons they cannot complain if one is paid off rather than the other. The payment of debts due from the father is considered to be one of the recognized legal necessities. When therefore, an antecedent debt has in fact been discharged, though not the one actually mentioned in the deed, the transfer should not be vitiated unless there be circumstances showing an attempted fraud. In cases where false recitals are dishonestly and fraudulently entered in deeds of transfer in order to deceive persons entitled to challenge the alienation, a Court may prevent the transferee from shifting his ground and setting up his own fraud: 1 U.P.L.R. (A.) 119, Foll.

Per Boys, J.—Alteration of the destination of the consideration is not itself sufficient to invalidate the transaction where the actual disbursement would support an allegation of legal necessity. But where the mis-description of the reason for the transaction is coupled with the further element that the reason had little or no existence in fact it cannot be accepted as a broad proposition of general application that it is quite immaterial what purpose is set out in the deed if only the vendee or mortgagee can subsequently show that the money was in fact disbursed for a proper purpose. But he who seeks equity must do equity, and if in the peculiar circumstances of a case equity is wholly on the side of the vendee, he ought to be protected.

Where the vendee was clearly very careless in not making proper enquiry at the outset, but on discovery of his mistake he exercised proper caution in securing that the money which he was to advance and which he still held was only devoted to objects which could have supported his sale-deed if they had the original objects set out in the deed and where the father was himself behind the suit ———Personal covenant in an earlier mortgage deed—If an antecedent debt.

A personal covenant given by a father at the time of entering into a mortgage could not be described as "disconnected in fact as well as in time." Even if the personal covenant be contained in an earlier mortgage, as that earlier mortgage is an alienation and not a debt, there is no antecedency on the principle of Chet Ram v. Ram Singh, A.I.R. 1922 P. C. 247. Thus whether the personal covenant be contemporaneous or previous, if it is part of a mortgage, it is not antecedent in the legal sense.

Whether there is an antecedent obligation dissociated in time and in fact from the sale or mortgage in any particular case is a question of fact.

Those who deal with a person who has only a limited interest in property and who professes to dispose of a larger interest are prima facie bound to make out the facts which authorize such a disposition. The only difference between the powers of a Hindu father as manager of the family, and that of other manager, is that the father can sell the property also for an antecedent debt of his which is neither illegal nor immoral. The sale will be valid if it was made to discharge an antecedent debt contracted by the father and to the extent necessary to discharge that debt. The onus lies on the purchaser to prove that it was to discharge an antecedent debt of the father that the sale to him was made or that he, after using reasonable care to ascertain the existence of such circumstances that would justify the sale, has acted in good faith. If the sale is proved to have been made for discharging the father's antecedent debts, then only the onus is shifted to the sons to establish affirmatively that the said debts were illegal or immoral and that the purchaser had also notice that they were of such a character: A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 112, Expl.; A.I.R. 1925 Mad. 1248, Diss. from. (Ramesam and Thiruvenkatachariar, JJ.). In the matter of AMIRTHALINGA THEVAN. 112 I.C. 553=1928 M.W.N. 602=28 M.L.W. 634=A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 986.

It is not correct to say that in every case where the property has passed out of the family (though under a private sale not in lieu of any antecedent debt and even when the legal necessity has not been established) the sons cannot challenge it unless they show that the debts were contracted for immoral purposes. Where a property has been sold by the father and the sons bring a suit to recover it, and apparently the property has not been sold away at public auction, then it lies upon the transferee to justify the alienation of the estate by showing that the debt was in lieu of some antecedent debt or that the alienation was for some legal necessity: A.I.R. 1917 P. HINDU LAW — Alienation — Father — Decree against.

———Compromise decree in mortgage suit, providing for sons' shares to be sold is binding on sons.

A compromise decree in a mortgage suit provided that if the decree was not fully satisfied out of the sale proceeds the balance of the decretal amount may be recovered from the mortgagor personally or from the assets of the mortgagor in the hands of his sons. The sale proceeds proving insufficient the decree-holder sought to execute the decree by sale of other property belonging to the mortgagorand the sale of the interest of his sons in such property,

Held, that the interest of the mortgagor in joint family property as well as the interest of the sons of the mortgagor could be sold in execution as the debt incurred was their father's and was not shown to be either immoral or illegal. (Wazir Hasan, A.J.C.). MT. MAHARAJI v. RAGHMAN.

Where joint family property is sold in execution of a money decree obtained against the father alone, the son cannot get rid of the sale without proving that the debt in respect of which the decree was obtained had been incurred by his father for what the Hindu Law would call an immoral purpose: 13 Cal. 21 and A. But the suit is not good on the ground that the major defendants represent the minor who has not been impleaded. If the joint ancestral property of a Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara law is attached in execution of a personal decree obtained against the father of the family, his sons can only secure the exemption of their interest in the said property from attachment or sale by satisfying the Court that the debt in respect of which the decree was obtained was tainted with immorality, or was otherwise such a debt as it could not be the pious duty of the sons to satisfy. HINDU LAW — Alienation — Father — Decree against.

A mortgage decree can be enforced against the ancestral property in the hands of the sons and grandsons of the mortgagor unless they can show that the mortgage debt was illegal or immoral. It is not sufficient to show that the transaction was extravagant or reckless or that the money might have been got at a cheaper rate of interest. The sons are liable not only for the original mortgage amount but also for the interest.

———Contract to sell—Purchaser privileged to indefinitely postpone completion of sale or repudiate the contract—Contract not binding on sons.

The father and manager of a joint Hindu family contracted to sell the family property to A for payment of a prior mortgage on the property but before the contract was completed into sale, he contracted to sell it to B. The contract with A remained in force for about three years and it subsequently fell through and the deposit received thereunder was returned to A. Immediately afterwards B sued for specific performance against manager alone and got a decree. Thereafter the sons, some of whom were adult at the date of the contract, sued to set aside the sale,

Held, that so long as earlier contract with A was in existence B was under no enforceable obligation to perform his own; and immediate payment of the purchase price being the prime necessity in view of the earlier mortgage to be paid off, the contract bound the vendor to sell, at a fixed price, property of apparently increasing value in circumstances which gave the purchasers the privilege of indefinitely postponing completion of the purchase and payment of the price, with the further privilege, if it so suited them, of repudiating the bargain altogether on the ground that so long as the earlier contract was insisted upon by its purchaser the vendor could make no title. A mortgage of joint family property by a Hindu father, without legal necessity but not for unlawful or immoral purposes, is invalid from its inception.

HINDU LAW — Alienation—Guardian—Burden of proof.

—Alienation—Guardian—Burden of proof.

———Alienee must prove necessity or reasonable enquiry on his part as to necessity—He need not see to its application—Application of the money is relevant in considering the existence of necessity.

In order to justify the alienation by a guardian of the minor's property there must be either "necessity" for the loan, or the creditor before lending money should have made reasonable enquiries to satisfy himself as to the existence of such necessity. Whether there was necessity or not for a loan or sale would depend upon the circumstances of the case : 6 M.I.A. 393 (P.C.), Foll. When a creditor seeks to justify alienation on the ground that he made enquiries and was reasonably satisfied that there was necessity, he is not bound further to prove that the money borrowed was actually utilized for the purposes for which it was borrowed; but, in discussing such a question it would be relevant to consider, with reference to the evidence, whether the money was utilized for the purposes for which it was raised. If it was not, then at the time it was raised there could obviously have been no necessity for it. If the evidence shows that the debt for which the money was raised was paid by other means and some time after, then the Court is justified in relying upon it for drawing the inference that there was no necessity justifying the transaction. A de facto guardian is under Hindu Law in the same position as a de jure guardian so far at least as acts done by him for the benefit of the minors are concerned and as regards such acts the same test is to be applied as would be applied in case of alienation by a legal guardian : 6 M. The second course is to direct the purchasers to pay the plaintiffs the difference between the actual value of the land and the consideration which is binding on them with interest. —Alienation—Guardian—Sister.

———Married sister managing minor sister's property—Alienation by her is not binding unless it be for necessity.

If the person acting on behalf of the minor is the manager of the estate, the alienation is valid and binding as against the minor if it is supported by legal necessity or otherwise beneficial to the minor: A.I.R. 1926 Nag. 81, Foll.

Where the minor sister is living with her married sister and the latter is in fact looking after her property as well as her person, it is competent to the latter to alienate a portion of her sister's property as manager and her act will bind the minor or her representatives-in-interest if it is proved to be for legal necessity. HINDU LAW—Alienation—Guardian—Validity.

———Married sister is not guardian—She cannot legally sell minor's property.

Under Hindu Law married sister is not a guardian, and any sale by her of her minor sister's property is absolutely void and can be set aside by the alienee of the minor's heir. The situation of an unauthorized guardian is not bettered by describing him as a de facto guardian. He may, by his de facto guardianship assume important responsibilities in relation to the minor's property, but he cannot thereby clothe himself with legal power to sell it: 34 All. 213, Foll. (Baker, J.C.). The matter cannot be regarded as different even if there was not only a contract by the guardian to convey the property, but, pursuant, to the contract the guardian, by way of partly performing the contract, has placed the other party in actual possession, for the doctrine of part-performance, being an equitable doctrine, can be held to apply to the person concerned, and if the contract is not a contract of the plaintiff who is suing, the equitable principle cannot be invoked against him: A. ———A Hindu minor widow's mother who was staying with her effected the sale of her minor daughter's property to pay off the debts of the minor's husband; and the husband's separated step-brother was the purchaser of the property. The property of the minor was being managed by the step-brother of the minor's husband and not by her mother,

Held, that the mother was not the de facto guardian of the minor daughter. The husband's step-brother not only had the right under the Hindu Law to be the plaintiff's guardian but by his acts had actually assumed the role

He should not therefore be allowed to deprive the minor of her property by getting a conveyance in his favour from the minor's mother who was not allowed to have anything to do with the minor's estate. The sale therefore was void and not binding on the minor. And the sale being void the husband's step-brother was not entitled to be paid the amount that he spent to to relieve the burden on the estate as he was only a volunteer inasmuch as he had no title to the property: 38 Mad. 1125; 17 Bom. ———Existence of necessity is immaterial if lender has made enquiries and acts honestly—Amount of debt need not be equal to amount required for necessity—Rate of interest higher than Court rate does not vitiate alienation.

The lender who advances money to a manager on mortgage of family property is bound to inquire into the necessities for the loan and to satisfy himself as well as he can, with reference to the parties with whom he is dealing, that the manager is acting in the particular instance for the benefit of the estate. But if he does so inquire, and acts honestly, the real existence of an alleged sufficient and reasonably credited necessity is not a condition precedent to the validity of his charge, and under such circumstances he is neither bound to see to the application of the money nor need he ascertain that the amount of the money, which he advances, is equal in amount to the entire debt which constitutes the family necessity. The fact that the interest on the mortgage was higher than the Court interest on the decree, does not vitiate the mortgage, nor does the fact that the amount of property mortgaged was larger than the amount which was about to be sold under the decree. ———Purchaser must prove that on a bona fide enquiry he satisfied himself as to existence of legal necessity.

A representation by itself raises no equity in favour of the purchaser or the mortgagee, for the law does not permit him to act upon that representation unless he satisfies himself by an honest and bona fide enquiry that the representation is true. Where he so enquires into the necessity for the loan or the sale and satisfies himself by an honest and bona fide enquiry that the necessity exists, the law completely protects him ; for it is not a condition for his success in any litigation which may arise out of the transaction that he should prove the existence of the necessity. It is sufficient if he proves that he made an honest enquiry and was satisfied that the necessity existed. The case would stand on a different footing if, in addition to the representation that he had power to charge the joint family property there is a further undertaking that he would make good the representation by partition or otherwise. Where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Court that there was such an undertaking on the part of the Karta of the joint family, the Court has ample power to compel him to do that which he undertook to do, but where there is no such undertaking, it is impossible for the Court to direct that the members of a joint family should hold their properties in definite shares and that the share of one or some of the members should remain charged for the payment of any money to the mortgagee or the purchaser: 20 W.R. 192; 13 C.W.N. 815 ; 14 C.W.N. 552, Diss.; 39 All. 500, Foll. (Das and Bucknill, JJ.). The power of avoidance in the hands of the transferee cannot be greater than that which would have been exercised by the co-parcenary body at the moment immediately preceding the transfer. The power cannot be used by a mortgagee to resist a suit for redemption by a subsequent alienee of the equity of redemption, since this would be using it for a purpose beyond protection of the mortgagee's interest. Nor can it be used by the transferee of a mere equity of redemption under a voluntary deed of transfer: for in this case the deed would have sufficiently defined the interest acquired. The adult co-parceners of a joint Hindu family contracted to sell to the plaintiff a house belonging to the family which was not in good condition and which did not fetch any rent. It was not necessary to sell the house as the family was in good circumstances. When the plaintiff sued for specific performance of the contract to sell, the minor co-parceners objected on the ground that there was no necessity for sale and that therefore the contract could not affect their interest,

Held, as the adult co-parceners very properly decided to dispose of the house which was in dilapidated condition and which the Municipal Committee wanted to pull down the minor co-parceners were bound by the agreement. The term 'necessity' must not be strictly construed. The benefit of the family may under certain circumstances mean a necessity for the transaction.

Where property has passed out of the hands of the family either in lieu of an antecedent debt or under an execution sale in respect of a debt of the father the sons can only recover the property by showing that the debt was either illegal or immoral, but this rule does not apply to a sale for cash. When a transaction such as this is impeached by the son it is for the creditor or transferee in the first instance to prove either legal necessity or at least such inquiry as would have satisfied a prudent man that the necessity existed, and the same rule applies where the defendant is not the original transferee but a pre-emptor. ———Improvident agreement by father—Sons are not bound by—Existence of antecedent debt does not of itself justify alienation of whole property—All adult members executing mortgage—There is a presumption of necessity.

Where the father as manager entered into an agreement to sell immovable properties the facts that he himself repented of it, and that his sons begged to be allowed to contest the suit brought with the object of enforcing it, serve to raise a considerable presumption that the agreement was an improvident one. The existence of the antecedent debt cannot of itself be regarded as justifying the father and manager of joint undivided Hindu family, in parting with practically the whole of the immovable property belonging to himself and his sons for inadequate price. In the case of an alienation of joint family property effected by the concerted action of all those members of the joint family who had attained majority at the time, there is a very considerable presumption in favour of such alienation having been made for real family necessity. If the father did what many men in difficulties do, namely, entered into an improvident transaction to rid himself of his immediate embarrassment, without due regard to the necessities of the case and the interests of the minor members of the family, the purchaser must be held, on principle to have taken such risk as was involved in the transaction into which he entered. Where money is borrowed for meeting expenses of litigation it is impossible for a widow to satisfy the creditor as to the actual amount she must borrow for meeting the future expenses of litigations. In a case like this the Court should be satisfied that legal necessity existed and that the sum lent was not unreasonably large. The transaction should be shown to be genuine and free from doubts of collusion between the creditor and the widow for raising a larger sum than was really needed. The interest of the reversioner should no doubt be protected but at the same time the widow should not be hampered by unreasonable restrictions in raising money when legal necessity exists. When the main necessity for the loan is brought about by the wrongful act of the reversioner himself he should not be heard to complain of the high rate of interest more especially when he made no attempt to show that money was available to the widow at a lower rate of interest than was charged in the bond. In such cases the amount of costs actually awarded to the widow should not be taken as basis because every one acquainted with the costs of litigation in this country knows that the actual amount which a successful litigant gets as costs allowed by the Courts is much less than the actual amount spent by him. The term "voidable" as used with reference to alienations of property by the manager of Hindu joint family or by female owners possessing only a limited interest therein, is not used in the sense in which it is used in the Contract Act, as meaning that the transaction is binding on the co parceners or on the reversioners until it is set aside by them and that the person who seeks to set it aside has to establish that the transaction was vitiated, by fraud, undue influence, misrepresentation or any other circumstances which would entitle a party to a contract to avoid it. It has invariably been accepted as a sound canon of the Hindu Law that where the alienation is not for justifiable necessity it is void and not only voidable as regards the shares of the other members of the family and, where such necessity exists, it is valid in its entirety : 35 Mad. 177, Foll. (Ramesam and Thiruvenkatachariar, JJ.). In the matter of AMIRTHALINGA. 112 I.C. 553= 28 M.L.W. 634=1928 M.W.N. 602= A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 986.

———Sale substantially for necessity—No necessity for small portion—Sale is not affected—Test for upholding such alienation laid down.

If a sale is found to be substantially for purposes binding on the family, the mere fact that in respect of a small portion of the consideration no necessity has been proved or shown cannot affect the sale or the exercise of the power of sale in such a case. Each case has got to be determined on its own facts. The principle on which Courts of law can hold whether or not in particular cases alienations were substantially for necessity is, that if a man of ordinary prudence, who is the ideal of the law in respect of his own property, or in respect of property which he is in charge of as manager of the family, would in those circumstances have alienated the 'property for the purpose of raising the amount required for the interest of the family, then it follows that it must be considered as a case where the sale was substantially for necessity. If the facts, however, should turn out to be that the sale or transaction was obviously so imprudent that no man of ordinary prudence would have entered into such a transaction in respect of any such property, then it follows that it was a case in which the power was wrongly exercised or purported to be. A sale of joint property will not be set aside merely because a part of the proceeds is not proved to have been applied to purposes of necessity. Where the defendants have succeeded in establishing necessity or antecedent debt with respect to a part of the consideration the difficulty often arises whether the sale-deed should or should not be upheld. If in the case of a sale by a widow a small portion of the purchase money was not required for urgent necessity, it does not follow that the sale itself was not due to necessity, unless it could be reasonably presumed or unless it is proved that the sale of a lesser area for the exact amount required for necessity was feasible. (Case-law discussed). The principle is applicable with all the more force to the case of an alienation by a male proprietor. ———Widow—Mortgage by widow and sale under it—Suit by reversioner challenging necessity for mortgage after a long-time—Recitals in mortgage-deed about necessity ought not to be disregarded.

In cases where sales by widows have been questioned after long lapse of time the recitals in the document as regards necessity ought not to be disregarded even though they are not strictly evidence; for it should be remembered that the actual proof of the necessity which justified the deed is not essential to establish its validity. It is only necessary that a representation should have been made to the purchaser that such necessity existed, and that he should have acted honestly and made proper enquiry to satisfy himself of its truth. The recital is clear evidence of the representation, and if the circumstances are such as to justify a reasonable belief that an enquiry would have confirmed its truth, then when proof of actual enquiry has become impossible, the recital, coupled with circumstances, would be sufficient evidence to support the deed. But it does not follow from the above principles that all ancient transactions ought to be upheld; where the circumstances tend the other way it will be reasonable not to apply these principles: 44 Cal. 186 (P.C.); 43 Mad. 541 (P.C.) and A. ———Alienation by widow—Recitals do not prove necessity but recitals in old deed cannot be lightly set aside.

Recitals cannot by themselves be relied upon for the purpose of proving the assertion of fact which they contain for if such proof were permitted the rights of reversioners could always be defeated by the insertion of carefully prepared recitals. But where all the original parties to the transaction are dead, and all those, who could have given evidence on the relevant points have grown old, or passed away, a recital consistent with the probability and circumstances of the case has greater importance and cannot be lightly set aside. ———They are not by themselves evidence—Lapse of time raises presumption and saves alienee from adverse inference.

HINDU LAW—Alienation—Necessity—Religious ceremony.

In the application of this rule, it is to be borne in mind that recitals in conveyance or mortgages of the existence of legal necessity are not by themselves evidence of the fact, and there must ordinarily be some evidence aliunde to substantiate the allegations: 19 C.L.J. 469 P.C., Foll.

Though lapse of time does not affect the question of onus of proof regarding legal necessity, it may give rise to a presumption of acquiescence or save the alienee from adverse inference arising from the scantiness of the evidence offered on his behalf. In other words when by efflux of time direct evidence independent of the recital becomes unavailable, a recital of necessity, consistent with probability and the circumstances, assumes greater importance: it is clear evidence of a representation to the purchaser, and when evidence of actual enquiry by him has become impossible, the recital coupled with circumstances which justify a reasonable belief that an enquiry would have confirmed its truth is sufficient evidence to support the transaction: 22 C.L.J. 180, Foll. (Mookerjee and Rankin, JJ.). ———Recital is evidence of representation—Recital without any other circumstances is not sufficient to support deed.

In the case of a document of considerable antiquity, a recital in the document is clear evidence of representation to the lender and if the circumstances are such as to justify a reasonable belief that an inquiry would have confirmed the truth of the representation, then, when proof of actual inquiry had become impossible, the recital coupled with the circumstances, would be sufficient evidence to support the deed. But if other circumstances, besides recitals, are wanting, it must be held that the party on whom the burden of proof lay has failed to discharge the burden of proof of the legal necessity. A daughter is not bound to sell her father's property to the prejudice of her son's interest for the purpose of putting the family in comfortable circumstances. If she has no other income and if the family was really starving and without selling the property she would starve she would be justified in selling the property inherited from her father to the prejudice of the reversioners, but it is not open to a widow or a limited owner, such as daughter, to sell the property in her possession because she could not manage the property or that it is beneficial to her as well as to the reversioners to sell it and buy some other property. Per Kanhaiya Lal, J.—Under the Hindu Law a widow is entitled to the beneficial enjoyment of the entire estate for her life; but if there are debts due by the estate, it is to her interest to pay the debts or the interest accruing due, lest she may lose the corpus or a portion of the estate by an enforced sale in satisfaction of those debts and her means of maintenance may thereby be affected. A widow is under a pious obligation to pay the debts of the last male-holder even though they may be barred by time.

A creditor is not affected by any precedent or subsequent mis-management of the estate, unless he has been a party to it. The immediate pressure on the estate and the danger to be averted are the principal matters about which he is bound to enquire, and if he acts in good faith, he is protected and can enforce the transaction as much against the widow as against her reversionary heirs.

In the absence of evidence to prove that the usufruct of the property was not sufficient to meet the Government revenue, the mere fact of allowing the revenue to fall into arrears will not put upon herself created liability, the impress of necessity, as would legalise the conveyance of the absolute title to the property in execution of the decree against her : 5 Pat. 585, Dist. (Sen and Niamatullah JJ.). The Hindu system recognizes two sets of religious acts, one is in connection with the actual obsequies of the deceased, and the periodical performance of the obsequial rites prescribed in the Hindu Religious law, which are considered as essential for the salvation of the soul of the deceased; the other relates to acts which, although not essential or obligatory, are still pious observances which conduce to the bliss of the deceased's soul. With reference to the first class of acts, the powers of the Hindu female, who holds the property, are wider than in respect of the acts which are simply pious and if performed are meritorious, so far as they conduce to the spiritual benefit of the deceased. In one case, if the income of the property, or the property itself, is not sufficient to cover the expenses, she is entitled to sell the whole of it. In the other case she can alienate a small portion of the property for the pious or charitable purpose she may have in view. If the property sold or gifted bears a small proportion (which it is impossible to define more exactly) to the estate inherited and the occasion of the disposition or expenditure is reasonable and proper according to the common notions of the Hindus, it is justifiable and cannot be impeached by the reversioner. The expression "commercial terms," as used in a deed is relative to the time and the place, the country and part of the country where the money is borrowed, the kind of security that is offered for the loan, the possibilities of realising the security, the supply of capital and the opportunity of persons willing to lend for possibly a considerable time, it cannot be confined, as in England, to something connected with a publicly announced and official rate of interest for loan generally or to a current rate generally allowed upon the highest security in financial transactions, such as an issue of debentures or something regulated by the day to day supply of money and by facilities for short loans. The word "commercial" must be understood of a community which is not a commercial community and of transactions which no one would call mercantile, as a comprehensive but convenient term for such terms as can be arranged freely between borrower and lender under the circumstances of the particular case: A.I.R. 1919 P.C. 12, Expl. (Viscount Sumner.) SUNDER MULL v. SATYA KINKAR SAHANA.

HINDU LAW—Alienation—Recitals.

———Recitals are no evidence—In old deeds they are presumptive evidence.

Recitals in deeds cannot by themselves be relied upon for the purpose of proving assertion of facts that they contain. They are certainly some kind of evidence and if the recitals happen to be in a document sufficiently old they become more and more weighty as time goes on. But such recitals can never be conclusive evidence. In the case of recitals found in old documents they can be used as presumptive evidence but the presumption that can arise from them cannot be said to be one which is unrebuttable: A.I R. 1916 P.C. 110, Foll. (Mullick, J.). ADHAR CHANDRA BHATTACHARYA v. SUSHILA SUNDARI PAL. 109 I. C. 35 (Cal.).

———Lapse of time—Value of recitals.

When proof of actual enquiry has become impossible by lapse of time, the recital of necessity and its representation to the purchaser would be sufficient evidence to support an alienation of joint family property by the manager, but this rule would not apply where there is no lapse of time: A.I.R. 1916 P.C. 110 (P. ———Recitals as to necessity—Lapse of time—Value of.

Recitals in deeds cannot by themselves be relied upon for the purpose of proving the assertions of fact which they contain. They can only be evidence as between the parties to the conveyances and those who claim under them, yet after a long period has elapsed, between the alienation and the suit to set it aside, when all those who could have given evidence on the relevant points have grown old or have passed away, a recital consistent with the possibilities and circumstances of the case assumes greater importance and cannot lightly be set aside. The recital is clear evidence of the representation, and if the circumstances are such as to justify a reasonable belief that an enquiry would have confirmed its truth then, when proof of actual enquiry has become impossible the recital coupled with such circumstances would be sufficient to support the deed: A.I.R. 1916 P. ———Alienations by guardian are only voidable—Minor on coming of age may impugn any sale that is not binding on him.

Alienations made by a guardian, if not legally justified, are only voidable and not void. The minor on coming of age may elect to stand by the same or may elect to avoid the same. The circumstance that the minor has elected not to impugn some sales by guardian is no ground by itself to debar him from impugning the same to an alienee, if on the facts proved a particular sale by the guardian is not binding on the minor. The motive of the minor in bringing the suit is irrelevant, if his legal right to the property is proved, though in appreciating the evidence, the motive may throw some light in particular cases. A declaratory decree may be given in a suit to contest an unnecessary alienation if the suit is brought honestly on behalf of a minor reversioner to protect his interests, but it would not be proper to pass such a decree in a case in which the minor is merely a figure head and the real plaintiff is the alienor himself, who has caused the suit to be instituted for the purpose of undoing his own act: A.I.R. 1925 Lah. 24, Foll. (Tek Chand and Bhide, JJ.). ———Portion of consideration not for necessity—If alienation will be set aside—Real question is if alienation was justified—If justified alienee need not see to the application of surplus.

The statement that, "where a father has sold ancestral property for the discharge of his debts, if the application of the bulk of the proceeds is accounted for the fact that a small part is not accounted for will not invalidate the sale," although in itself a correct statement of the law, is not a complete statement of the law; a sale will not necessarily be invalidated wherever the part of the consideration not accounted for cannot be described as small.

The true question which falls to be answered in such cases is whether the sale itself was one which was justified by legal necessity. This is the point of view from which the matter should be approached.

Where the sale has been held to be justified, but there is no evidence as to the application of a portion of the consideration, a presumption arises that it has been expended for proper purposes, and for the benefit of the family.

Where the purchaser acts in good faith and after due enquiry, and is able to show that the sale itself was justified by legal necessity; he is under no obligation to enquire into the application of any surplus and is, therefore, not bound to make re-payment of such surplus to the members of the family challenging the sale: 6 M.I.A. 393 (P.C.); (1864) W.R. 385; (1867) 8 W.R. 75, Rel. on; 25 All. 330 and 27 All. 494, Disapproved; 86 I. C. 91; A.I.R. 1925 All. 324; 47 All. 355, Overruled.

Where the sale challenged was made after due enquiry as to the legal necessity by the vendee, such necessity had been proved by him to the extent of Rs. 3,000 out of a total price of the Rs. 3,500 and sale was for an adequate consideration,

Held, that the mere fact that after a long interval of time the purchaser had not been able to establish how the surplus of Rs. 500 was applied is not a sufficient ground in law for setting aside the ———Alienation not binding on sons then living, not binding on sons born subsequently also.

A son cannot object to alienations validly made by his father before he was born or begotten, because he could only by birth obtain an interest in property which was then existing in his ancestor. Hence if at the time of the alienation there had been no one in existence whose assent was necessary or if those who were then in existence had consented, he could not afterwards object on the ground, that there was no necessity for the transaction. If, however, an alienation was made by a father without necessity and without the consent of sons then living, it would not only be invalid against them but also against any son born before they had ratified the transaction, and no consent given by them after his birth would be binding upon him. Where a promissory note executed a few days before the mortgage in favour of the mortgagee himself constitutes part of the consideration of the mortgage, it is upon the mortgagee to show that this debt, although it may be called an antecedent debt was borrowed for purposes which would make it binding on the joint family. ———Reversioners consenting—Purposes of alienation not mentioned in deed but decided by alienees in their written statement—Onus lies on reversioners to disprove.

Where reversioners consent to a transaction by a limited owner, in the absence of any evidence to the contrary, their consent is prima facie evidence or presumptive evidence of the existence of circumstances which would be sufficient to constitute necessity under the Hindu Law and which would be sufficient to bind the reversion. It is not necessary that the purpose itself should be mentioned in the document. All that the law requires is that the alienee should prove the existence of circumstances at the time the transaction was entered into which would justify a limited owner to pass full interest in favour of the alienee in other words which would entitle a limited owner to bind the reversion by the alienation.

Where the alienees did allege the circumstances which would amount to necessity in their written statement:

HINDU LAW—Alienation—Widow—Consent of reversioner—Effect of.

No act or omission committed by the presumptive reversioners can amount to an estoppel as against the reversioners who actually succeeded to the estate. Their conduct may under certain circumstances raise a presumption in favour of legal necessity but can never debar the actual reversioners from claiming the estate in assertion of their own rights which they do not claim through the former reversioners. Therefore the result of a previous litigation by the presumptive reversioners does not amount to an estoppel. (Sulaiman and Sen, JJ.). Held, that as no interest in immovable property can validly pass from one person to another in the eye of the law without there being a registered document of transfer, in the absence of such document, the proprietary interest in the property could not have passed from the widow to J or from the collateral to J and even if the collaterals be estopped from claiming the possession of the property it is impossible to hold that proprietary title has actually become vested in J or his transferee by virtue of the oral gift : A.I.R. 1923 All. 387 (F.B.), Dist. (Sulaiman and Kendall, JJ.). The election of a reversioner to treat the alienation by a Hindu widow as a nullity, so as to make the possession of the alienee wrongful, can be expressed not only by the filing of a suit, but by a simple demand.

The intention of a reversioner to avoid an alienation by a Hindu widow can also be communicated to the alienee by an attempt to take possession forcibly: 34 Cal. 329 (P.C.), Expl. (Hallifax, A.J.C.). SITARAM MADHOJI v. MAROTI.

———Alienation by widow can be challenged by after-born reversioner.

The limitations imposed upon the estate of a widow or daughter under Hindu Law are not imposed upon her for the benefit of reversioners. If she does alienate without legal necessity, then, if there be no reversioners, the alienation may be set aside by the Crown taking the property by escheat. ———Alienations by widows are only voidable and only reversioners can avoid them.

It is the reversioners and the reversioners alone that can dispute a gift or other alienation by a Hindu widow. If they choose to allow the property to which they are entitled to remain with the donee or alienee, that is their affair and no one else can object.

It is not a correct view that a gift is void beyond the life-time of the widow even if it remains unchallenged by the reversioners during her lifetime or after her death.

A Hindu widow is not a tenant for life but is owner of her husband's property subject to certain restrictions on alienation. Her alienation is not therefore absolutely void but is voidable at the election of the reversionary heir. (Dawson-Miller, C. J. and Mullick, J.). They do not cease to be operative until they are set aside. A reversioner therefore cannot institute a suit for ejectment of the alienees in the Revenue Court without setting aside the alienation. A Hindu widow is not a tenant for life, but is owner of her husband's property, subject to certain restrictions on alienation and subject to its devolving upon her husband's heirs upon her death. But she may alienate it, subject to certain conditions being complied with. Her alienation is not, therefore, absolutely void, but it is prima facie voidable at the election of the reversionary heir. He may think fit to affirm it, or he may at his pleasure treat it as a nullity without the intervention of any Court, and he shows his election to do the latter by commencing an action to recover possession of the property. There is, in fact, nothing for the Court either to set aside or cancel as a condition precedent to the right of action of the reversionary heir. The rule of collateral succession obtains among the legitimate descendants of the two sons of a dancing woman whose paternity is unknown, i. e., each branch can inherit to the other.

It is a misnomer to call the son of a dancing woman whose paternity is unknown an illegitimate son. The illegitimate son is one born out of wedlock, i e., no marriage was solemnized between the father and the mother. In the case of sons of prostitutes or dancing women the paternity is unknown and it is only an euphemism to call them illegitimate sons.

People who have been born in India and who are of the Hindu faith, and whose customs and manners are those of Hindus, are governed by the Hindu Law. In the case of a dancing woman or a Hindu prostitute her religion is Hindu and her customs, manners and observances are Hindu, and her sons are Hindus, and the Hindu Law therefore is applicable to them. It is consonant with reason and principle that when a particular system of law is made applicable to a set of persons, the whole of that system should be applied and not portions of it, unless any custom, valid and binding, is proved to the contrary, or else the application of that system is modified either by statute or by anything contained in the rules of that system. It is not necessary that in order to have heritable blood inheritance should be traced through the father. It logically follows that the sons of a dancing woman or a prostitute have heritable blood between them. Hence there is heritable blood between the lines of their legitimate descendants. The Jains are of Hindu origin; they are Hindu dissenters. The only ceremony necessary to the validity of an adoption among the Jains is the giving and taking of the adopted son, actually putting of the boy in the lap of the adoptive father or mother is not necessary.

——Migrating family—New school adopted—Revival by one member not permissible.

Where a Hindu family migrates from one province to another, the presumption is that it carries with it old laws and customs as to succession and family relations but this presumption may be rebutted by proof that the family has adopted the law and usages of the place to which it has migrated, and once it is proved that a new family usage has grown up in the course of generations, possibly with the concurrence or acquiescence of families of the same group, it furnishes the governing law of the family. It would obviously lead to much confusion and abundant litigation, if the law permitted arbitrary attempts to revive and give effect to the original usages, after they had been clearly abandoned, and the abandonment had been acted upon so long as to result in the adoption of new usages. It is then not open to a member at any time to disclaim his personal law and adopt another at his choice; if this were permissible chaos could be the only result. (Mookerjee and Cuming, JJ.). Held, that there was no authority of the mortgagor either as guardian of the members of the family or its surviving efficient member to mortgage the family estate and that the mortgage was not enforceable against the family properties since a mere de facto guardian has no such power.

Upanayanam is the ceremony which differentiates the three higher classes, namely the Brahman, the Kshatriya and Vaisya, from the Sudra. Where in cases of controversy as to whether a person belongs to the twice-born class or to the Sudra class, it is shown that Upanayanam ceremony was not performed, it is a very important piece of evidence to show that the person belongs to the Sudra caste and not to the higher caste, though the converse case of the non-performance of Upanayanam by the twice-born would not necessarily show that the person not performing it belongs to the lower class. In cases of Sudras for whom Upanayanam ceremony is not prescribed there is the practice of putting on the sacred thread at the time of the marriage or funeral ceremonies. This is called the Alankara Poonool or Loukika Poonool [or the ornamental sacred thread] and is merely an imitation of the higher classes involving no religious consequences not being prescribed by any of the Smrithis. ———Custom at variance is not necessarily a departure from or exception to Hindu Law principles.

It is now settled by a long course of decisions that the Hindu Law, as understood by the Judges and the legal profession is applicable to all Hindus and a custom not in accordance with the general Hindu Law has to be proved by the party setting it up. But, in considering the proof of such a custom, the Court should not labour under the impression that the custom pleaded is a conscious departure or from variation of the Hindu Law applicable to the parties. The custom is not an exception to the general Hindu Law as if that a set of persons who were governed by the Hindu Law agreed to adopt a course of conduct in variance with the law which governs them. In weighing the evidence as regards any custom which is set up the Court should consider whether the caste or sect or clan among whom it is said to prevail ever adopted wholly or only with some reservations the general body of Hindu Law and whether they ever intended to alter their customs and customary laws completely. ———Pressure is not pre-requisite of "antecedence."

If the debt was "antecedent" it is immaterial that it was neither pressing nor even due, since pressure is not a pre-requisite of "antecedence," though it is proof of necessity; nor is the fact that the debt might have been otherwise paid even relevant to the question of antecedence: A. ———Alienation by father as manager for antecedent debt binds sons but not other co-parceners.

There is a very clear distinction between cases in which an alienation for an antecedent debt is made by a Hindu father and is being contested by the sons, and cases in which an alienation for an antecedent debt, is made by the managing co-parcener of a joint undivided estate, and is being contested by other co-parceners, not the sons of the person making the alienation. In the former case the sons are bound by the father's alienation to the extent of their interest in the joint family property; in the latter case the co-parceners are not bound by the manager's alienation and their interest in the joint family property is unaffected by it: 21 A.L.J.,

—Debt—Antecedent debt—Burden of proof.

———Debt not illegal or immoral—Mortgagee need not prove necessity.

Where joint family property was mortgaged by the father to his antecedent creditor in consideration for his antecedent debt, and the debt was a just debt, i.e., not tainted with fraud or an act of extravagance, the mortgagee need not prove that such antecedent debt was for a necessary purpose: 81 P.L.R. 1912; A.I.R. 1926 Lah. 569; 65 P.R. 1900 (F.B.); 60 I.C. 714 and A.I.R. 1921 Lah. 112, Ref. (Shadi Lal, C.J. and Skemp, J.). ———Mortgagee proving antecedency of debts—Sons must prove that they were for immoral or illegal purposes.

In all cases the mortgagee must, in the first instance, establish that his debt was either for legal necessity or for payment of antecedent debts or for the benefit of the family. Once the mortgagee has established that the loan was for payment of antecedent debts it is no longer incumbent upon him to prove that these antecedent debts in themselves were for necessity. In order to get rid of his liability the burden then lies on the son to establish that those antecedent debts were tainted with immorality or illegality: 13 Cal. 21 (P.C.) and A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 50, Foll. (Lindsay and Sulaiman, JJ.). ———'Antecedent' debt can be in favour of the alienee—Dissociation in fact and time explained.

Where a previous mortgage deed is renewed in favour of the same mortgagee and the consideration for the subsequent deed is the amount due on the earlier one the alienation can be deemed to be in lieu of an 'antecedent debt' so as to be binding on the sons, unless they can establish immorality or illegality : A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 50; 46 All. 95, Expl. In Brij Narain's case, A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 50, their Lordships do not say that the two debts must be absolutely independent of each other, or wholly unconnected with each other. All that is said is that the previous debt, in order to be antecedent debt, should be truly independent and not part of the subsequent transaction. Whenever a previous debt is set off in a subsequent mortgage deed, the second deed is in one way connected with the first, and one might in one sense say that the second is not independent of the first. But the true test to apply is whether the first one was independent of the second. The two deeds must not be part and parcel of the same transaction, but they must be distinct and separate not only in point of time but in reality. There must be dissociation in time as well as in fact. If at the time when the earlier mortgage transaction was entered into the later one was not even in contemplation, the first will be independent and will remain an antecedent debt, even though it be set off in the second document and even though both be in favour of the same mortgagee. The obligation incurred by a father in order to be binding upon his sons must have two attributes, namely, first, that it must have been incurred antecedently to the transaction in suit and, secondly, it must have been incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate or the security afforded or supposed to be available by such a joint estate : A.I.R. 1922 P. Under Hindu Law family property in the hands of the sons is bound by a mortgage executed by their father, during his lifetime, to pay off antecedent debts, if two conditions have been fulfilled, firstly, the mortgage must have been to discharge an obligation antecedently incurred and secondly, the obligation antecedently incurred must have been incurred wholly apart from the ownership of the joint estate: 39 All. 437 (P.C.), Foll. [Note:— Compare Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad, A.I.R. 1924 P. ———Test is, if loan and mortgage to secure it, are one transaction.

The true test of antecedency is whether the payment of the advance and the transfer securing its payment are in reality a single transaction or not. The mere hope by the creditor that the debts will be binding on the estate of the joint family and his expectation of recovering them from the joint estate do not make the payment and the transfer a single transaction. What makes the subsequent transfer a part of the prior transaction of the advance is the original understanding or agreement at the time of the advance. If there is such an understanding, both the payment and the transfer flowing from it are really one transaction, though the transfer is put off to a later date; ———Antecedent debt must be prior in time and in fact to the alienation by the father.

To satisfy the validity of an alienation of the undivided estate on the basis of an antecedent debt the alienation must be by the father for his debts antecedent in time and in fact to the alienation supporting it. A mortgage by sons to re-pay the mortgage debt incurred by their father is not valid on the ground of its having been made for the purpose of paying off an antecedent debt. So also the mortgage debt incurred by the father is not antecedent if the alienation by him is not made for the payment of a debt prior or in time and in fact to the security supporting it. ———Father's debt on security of property is not antecedent.

Per *Drake-Brockman and Batten, J. The fact that the father is dead at the time of suit makes no difference : A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 247; 6 P.L.J. 526, Foll. (Batten, J.C. on difference between Drake-Brockman, J.C. and Hallifax, A.J.C.). ———Mortgage debt is not an antecedent debt.

A mortgage executed by a father is not an antecedent debt since it is not incurred by the father independently of the security of the joint family property. The sons are therefore entitled to advance the plea that there was no legal necessity for the second mortgage by the other sons (their brothers) to pay off the mortgage by their father so as to bind their shares : 39 All. 437, Foll. [Note Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad, A.I.R.1924 P.C. 50]. ———Invalid mortgage is not an antecedent debt for subsequent sale.

A mortgage, invalid at its date in so far as purporting to encumber the joint family property, cannot become a just and legal consideration on the principle of "antecedent debt" for a sale at a later date. The antecedency should not only be an antecedency to the mortgage itself but there must be disconnection with the mortgage in fact as well as in time. The doctrine of "pious obligation" cannot be invoked against grandsons while the sons of the mortgagor are living. (Lord Shaw.) CAET RAM v. RAM SINGH. 67 I. ———Usufructuary mortgage—Mortgagor personally liable, if mortgagor is dispossessed—No personal liability—No antecedent debt.

If once it is proved that a sale has taken place in consideration of antecedent debt the sons are precluded from attacking it, but they are not precluded from raising the prior question whether the sale really was in consideration of such a debt. In order to validate a transaction entered into by a father in consideration of antecedent debt there must be not only antecedency in time but also true dissociation in fact. A clause in a deed of usufructuary mortgage executed by a father, making the mortgagor personally liable for the mortgage money in case the mortgagee be dispossessed from the mortgaged property, does not constitute a personal liability so as to treat it as antecedent debt : Sahu Ram Chandra v. Bhup Singh referred to. HINDU LAW—Debts—Father—Burden of proof.

———Loan on the security of joint family property is not antecedent debt.

Where a father borrows money by mortgaging joint family property and the mortgage contains a covenant for personal liability the debt is not an "antecedent" debt because of the personal covenant, because the debt is not borrowed wholly apart from the security afforded or supposed to be available by the joint estate. For a similar reason, where money is borrowed by executing a promissory note and the promissory note itself recites that the money was taken in order that it might form part of the mortgage which was to be subsequently executed the debt cannot be said to be antecedent: 39 All. 437 (P.C.), Foll. [Note.—Compare Brij Narain v. Mangal Prasad, A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 50.] (Mears, C.J. and Banerji, J.). ———Decree against father on mortgage—Sons not impleaded—Personal remedy against father time-barred—Mortgagee must prove necessity and no question of pious obligation arises (Iqbal Ahmad, J., differing Walsh, J.).

The pious obligation of a Hindu son has reference only to simple money debts which the father is under a personal obligation to pay and to simple money decrees obtained against the father for recovery of such debts, and a distinction must be drawn between a simple money debt and a decree for such debt on the one hand and a debt secured by a mortgage of the family property and a decree for sale of such property on the other. So far as simple money debt or a decree for such debt against the father is concerned, the father is under a personal obligation to discharge that debt or that decree, and the sons labour under a pious obligation to discharge the liability of their father. But in the case of a debt incurred on the security of the family property by the father, when the mortgagee has not sued for recovery of the debt within six years of the date of accrual, of the cause of action and has thus allowed his right to a simple money-decree against the father to become time-barred, the personal obligation of the father disappears, and the mortgagee is then only entitled to recover the debt by sale of the mortgaged property, and in such a case the sons labour under no pious obligation to discharge that debt for the simple reason that the debt is not due from their father.

The principle of pious obligation cannot be applied to the case of a decree for sale on the basis of a mortgage of the family property. In the cass of a suit brought by a creditor against the father for recovery of a simple money debt all that he has to prove, in order to entitle him to a decree, is that he advanced the debt, and it is not necessary for him to prove the purpose for which the debt was incurred. On the other hand, in a suit for sale of the family property, the mere fact that the mortgagee advanced the debt does not entitle him to a decree, unless and until he succeeds in further proving that the debt was advanced for family necessity. Because of their pious obligation to discharge their father's debts the sons cannot impugn the validity of a simple money decree to which they were no party, on the ground of the absence of legal necessity for incurring the debt. But in the case of a decree for sale, when the personal remedy against the father has become time-barred, the sons are under no such obligation and, therefore, if the mortgagee has obtained a decree for sale of the joint family property without impleading the sons or without suing the father in his representative capacity, the sons are entitled to challenge the validity of that decree on the ground that they being no parties to that decree are not bound by the same and in such a suit, unless the mortgagee succeeds in proving that the debt secured by the mortgage was for legal necessity, the sons will be entitled to avoid the decree: 12 A.L.J. 613. Foll.; A.I.R. 1924 Oudh 394, Diss. from.

Though in certain circumstances it might not result in a debt, yet if the obligation was incurred before the birth of a son, or as in this case, before the adoption, it is not open to the son to dispute the liability of the whole family property for the debt which resulted from obligation incurred by the father before the date of adoption, and the son's share is liable to be proceeded against in execution of a decree obtained against the father for the recovery of advance and for damages for breach of contract: A.I.R. 1921 Mad. 447, Dist. (Devadoss and Madhavan Nair, JJ.). ——Judgment against father alone operates against sons' interests unless the debt is illegal or immoral.

By the Mitakshara Law according to 44 Cal. 524 (P.C.), a judgment against the father of the family, cannot be executed against the whole of the Mitakshara property, if the debt in respect of which the judgment has been obtained was a debt incurred for illegal or immoral purposes. In every other event it is open to the execution creditor to sell the whole of the estate in satisfaction of the judgment obtained against "the father alone." These words could not be clearer and they are absolutely comprehensive. There are no limitations, qualifications or reservations to the effect that the debt must be incurred by the father as representing the estate or purporting to be for the benefit of the estate or in some capacity other than his personal capacity. The words in 44 Cal. 524 are: "In every other event it is open to the execution creditor to sell the whole of the estate in satisfaction of the judgment obtained against the father alone"—and there is nothing to qualify the words, "the father alone." The decision in 44 Cal. 524 is to the effect that, once a simple money decree is passed against the father, and manager of a joint Hindu family, that simple money decree can be executed by the execution creditor against the whole of the estate, and will operate against the interests of the sons, unless the debt has been incurred for illegal or immoral purposes. The decision in 15 A.L.J. 437 lays down an absolutely different proposition that joint family property cannot be transferred by an act of volition on the part of the manager, except with the consent of other co-parceners or for legal necessity or in payment of antecedent debts, and that the doctrine of the pious duty of a Hindu son to satisfy his father's debts can have no operation to validate such a transfer, so long at any rate as the father is alive. But in order to apply the principle of the second decision, there must be a transfer by the volition of the manager. (Stuart, J.). ——Mortgage-decree—When binds sons.

——Decrees on debts incurred neither for necessity nor for paying antecedent debt—Not binding on sons—Mortgage not binding—Decree thereon is not also binding.

It cannot be laid down that apart from the question of family necessity or antecedent debt there is a pious obligation on the sons to pay the debts due by their father, which had matured into a decree and that the entire interest of the family could be sold in satisfaction of the decree obtained for the payment of that debt.

A decree unless it is binding on sons does not improve the position of the creditor any more than a sale which a father effects in order to pay a debt incurred by himself on the security of the mortgaged property. The exception to the general rule, that no manager, guardian or trustee can be entitled for his own purpose to dispose of the estate which is under his charge, cannot be extended where a liability under a mortgage merges into a decree unless that decree can by any rule of law be held to be binding on the other members of the family. If a mortgage is not valid in so far as it purports to encumber the joint family property, it cannot become a just and legal consideration if in the absence of the sons of the mortgagor, a decree had been obtained on foot thereof against the mortgagor; otherwise the protection intended for the junior members of the family can in that way be easily circumvented and becomes illusory. Improper, imprudent, unreasonable, or dishonest debts are not necessarily immoral. But liability arising by the commission of offences by the father has been always held to be immoral. The test of benefit to the estate is not a material question for consideration as the liability of the son depends upon the nature of the act.

HINDU LAW—Debts—Necessity—Interest.

———When lender should justify high rate of interest.

The manager of a joint family, whether the father or not, is not entitled in law to borrow money at an exhorbitant rate of interest unless there is necessity for such a rate, and if the rate of interest is excessive, the onus will be on the lender to show that there was necessity for such an onerous rate. If the manager, bona fide is in urgent necessity for money and cannot get it at a lower figure, then he is in law justified in borrowing at that figure, and the aftermath of that transaction due to the accumulation of the interest to a huge amount on account of the non-payment of interest by the manager is irrelevant to the consideration of whether he was justified or not in borrowing at the rate of interest at which he borrowed. The onerous nature of the interest would only be justified reasonably if the necessity for the money at the time of the loan was really urgent. The more urgent the need the less unjustifiable a high rate of interest will be. Both questions are, questions of fact to be decided by the circumstances of the case. Those attacking the transactions must first show prima facie that the rate of interest is unnecessarily high for the circumstances of the case. It may be that in certain cases the original rate of interest is prima facie so excessive that proof is practically unnecessary and that the plaintiff must know that it is his duty to show necessity for it. But in other cases it may be that the rate, although high, is not so high that the plaintiff should reasonably take it for granted that he has to explain it, even though the Court does not call upon him to do so. ———Payment of time-barred debt by father is not immoral.

The payment of a time barred debt by a Hindu father could not in any sense be treated as an improper act or. to use the stock phrase, a transaction tainted with immorality. Per Sulaiman, J.—A mortgage-deed executed by a father of a joint Hindu family in consideration of an antecedent debt which had become time-barred is not binding upon the sons. When a debt has become time barred it has ceased to be a legal debt and, even though the Hindu Law does not recognise the principle of limitation the sons can take advantage of the statute of limitation which makes such debt unenforceable. To hold otherwise would be to extend to an unprecedented extent the exception laid down by Sahu Ram's case to the general rule that if the debt is not for the benefit of the estate, and alienation of the estate for the payment of the debt is bad: 8 A. If a son is under a pious obligation to pay the debts of his father; it does not appear how the liability dies on the death of the son, if he leaves property, which had devolved on him on the death of his father, in the hands of those who succeed to his estate, even though it may not have amounted to a charge: A.I.R. 1921 All. 163, Ref. (Kanhaiya Lal, J.C.). There may be some special circumstances in some cases to show that the execution proceedings were limited to a particular share of interest. ———Liability extends to grandsons and great-grandsons.

It is beyond question that under the law of the Mitakshara the great-grandson is as much a member of the joint family as a son or grand-son. It is also clear that the right in ancestral property extends to four generations beginning with the father, and that this right springs from "birth."

Under the law of the Mitakshara the rights of descendants are co-extensive with their obligations. Sons and grandsons are expressly declared to have controlling rights in respect of ancestral estate.

The Hindu lawyers appear to have made a difference in the obligations resting upon sons, grandsons and great-grandsons. The son was bound to discharge the ancestral debt as his own, principal and interest, whether he received any assets or not from the ancestor. The grandsons had to discharge the debt without interest and the great-grandson's liability arose only if he received any assets from the ancestor.

The British Indian Courts have held that the son and grandson are not liable for any debt unless they receive assets and that the obligations of each of them, sons and grandsons, are co-extensive. In the case of Brij Narain v. Mangala Prasad, A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 50; 46 All. 95, the son's liability is expressly laid down, and that rule extends equally to grandsons and great-grandsons: 19 All. 26 (F.B.), Expl. (Mr. Ameer Ali.) MAIST ULLAH v. DAMODAR PRASAD. 98 I.C. 1031=48 All. 518=53 I.A. 204=25 A.L.J. 1=28 Bom. ——Debt contracted by criminal misappropriation is immoral.

Where the debt of father is alleged to be constituted of the money misappropriated by him and it is contended that the debt was tainted with immorality, to determine what constitutes " immorality " of a debt contracted by a Hindu father the test to be applied is whether or not the action of the father which resulted in the debt was infected with an element of criminality. Whether such an element is established or not and the degree of infection which will support a plea of "immorality" must be question for determination on the facts of each case ; and though a conviction for misappropriation or other cognate offence may be good proof of such element, proof of a previous conviction is certainly not essential. The criminality and its degree may be inferred from a consideration of the whole facts. If there was such an element it may be regarded as an immoral debt ; it is otherwise, if there was no such criminal element : 6 All. 234 ; 14 A.L.J. 610 and A I.R. 1924 All. 742, Ref. (Boys and Banerji, JJ.). ——Pious obligation of sons during his lifetime is only contingent.

Under the Hindu Law, subject to certain exceptions, the whole of the undivided estate of a joint family is liable in the hands of sons for the debts of their father. The sons by reason of their duty to pay their father's debts cannot recover property unless the debts are taken for illegal or immoral purposes. There is a pious obligation on the sons to pay such debts. Where the father is alive, the obligation is only contingent, for the father may discharge the same in his lifetime or there may be ample personal estate belonging to the father available out of which the debts might be discharged or no joint family property left from which their satisfaction might be possible, it makes no difference in principle whether the property passes out by foreclosure or sale, what matters is, that it should have passed out to pay off or satisfy an antecedent debt. In all joint families if a person who is not the father has the power of management the criterion by which the binding nature of debts should be decided is whether they were borrowed for the benefit of the family and would bind the minors,

A. B and C, the deceased father of suing minors, were undivided brothers and formed members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law. A and the son of B who was the second executant of the promissory note in suit were the managing members. A and his deceased brother D had been carrying on a speculative trade for which the suit money was borrowed on behalf and for the benefit of the joint family including the minors along with their partners,

Held, that the business which was started by two members of the family in partnership with strangers was not a business which was of such a nature as would bind the minors of the family: A.I.R. 1922 P. ———Family arrangement is valid unless vitiated by fraud, undue influence or coercion.

A famil settlement is inter alia an arrangement by which the method of enjoying the ancestral property comes to be settled between the parties and to family arrangements great importance is attached by the Courts. In the absence of proof of mistake, inequality of position, undue influence, coercion, or like ground, a partition or family arrangement made in settlement of the disputed or doubtful claim is a valid and binding arrangement which the parties thereto cannot deny, ignore or resile from: and this principle is applicable where some of the members of the family are minors, or where the settlement has been effected by a qualified owner whose act in this respect will bind the reversioner: 34 C.L.J. 323 and 23 C.W.N. 118, Foll.

The doctrine of legal benefit is applicable, though at the same time the Court should not be disposed to scan with too much nicety the quantum of consideration in case of family settlement. The legal justification of the transaction should be tested on much wider grounds in the cases where —Family arrangement—Compromise of doubtful claim.

———Bona fide settlement of family dispute by widow is binding on reversioners.

A settlement of family disputes between the widow and a claimant to the estate which took place more than forty years prior to suit and has not been questioned till the date of suit must be held to be a settlement of bona fide family disputes binding on the estate, in the absence of anything in the evidence available to suggest the contrary.

Per Reilly, J.—"I do not agree with the suggestion made at one stage of the arguments that because there was this dispute so long ago there is a presumption that it was a bona fide dispute. In such a case, the circumstances must be examined so far as evidence regarding them is available."

If a person putting forward a claim to the estate believed in good faith that he had some right in the family properties, whether that claim was valid in law or not, and the dispute between him and the widow was compromised with the aid of mediators, that compromise is binding on the reversioners: 51 I.A. 145; 47 M. 181; 46 M.L.J. 172 (P.C.); 44 I.A. 229: 45 C. 17; 34 M.L.J. 1 (P.C.), Dist. (Phillips and Reilly, JJ.). ———Abandonment of claim must be by one entitled to it.

The real consideration and motive of a compromise is not the sacrifice of a right but the abandonment of a claim. There can be no abandonment of a claim except by the person who has the title or set up his own title to the thing claimed. A, while compromising with C, cannot abandon a claim that may possibly be made by B, but not made by B and without B's knowledge, and, therefore, such a compromise between A and C is not a bona fide family settlement in compromise of a doubtful claim; and whatever surrender is made by C is not binding on members of the joint family. —Family arrangement—No transfer.

———Widow and brother of the last holder—Each taking a share under family arrangement—No transfer.

Wherever doubts and disputes have arisen with regard to the rights of different members of the same family, and fair compromises have been entered into to preserve the harmony and affection or to save the honour of the family, those arrangements have been sustained by the Court even although they may rest upon grounds which would not have been considered satisfactory, if the transaction had occurred between mere strangers.

There was a contest between a widow and the brother of her deceased husband for possession of the family estate, that dispute was settled by a definite arrangement, under which the widow obtained absolute title in a fractional share of the estate. The widow claimed that as her own property and more besides in her right, and, in consideration of her being allowed to retain that as an absolute property, she gave up her claim to the remaining property. The other party, on his side, consented to the widow retaining the one anna share in the village in question on the latter giving up her claim to the remaining property.

Held, that such a compromise was a legal and enforceable one as it was nothing more than a family settlement in which each party took a share of the family property by independent title and it was not a transaction to which S. 6, T. P. Act, would apply: A.I.R. 1921 All. 248; A.I.R. 1923 Bom. 276; A.I.R. 1918 P.C. 70 and A.I.R. 1914 P.C. 44, Foll.; A.I.R. 1927 Nag. 312 and A.I.R. 1921 Bom. 446, Dist. (Findlay, J.C.). —Gift—Absolute estate.

———Gift to widow of pre-deceased son—No deed to evidence—Nature of donee's interest—Absolute interest held to have been gifted.

When a property is given to a person whether that person is man or woman the grant must be taken to be an absolute grant. If a person says: "I give this property to a particular woman" there is no rule of Hindu Law which limits that grant to the life time of that particular woman.

A Hindu having no son or adopted son made a gift of a plot of land to the wife of his predeceased son because she wanted to be maintained. There was no document evidencing the gift from which the precise nature of the gift could be construed.

Held, that the gift was of an absolute interest. The gift could not be in lieu of maintenance as the donee was not a person who would be entitled to claim maintenance and the gift to her stood on the same footing as a gift to a stranger: 24 W. Held, the gift created an absolute estate. (Stuart, J.). ABHEY SINGH v. HIMTA. 65 I.C. 653= A.I.R. 1923 All. 234.

HINDU LAW—Gift—Construction.

—Gift—Construction.

———Wife to hold from generation to generation—No other person to have power of interference—Full proprietary rights including rights of alienation held to have passed to wife.

If the donor does not confer upon the lady express power of alienation, such power may nevertheless be deduced from the terms of the gift if the words used are sufficient to confer upon her absolute ownership, unless the circumstances or the context show that such absolute ownership was not intended. There is no magic in the use of any particular word or form of words: the document must be construed as a whole and its fair import deduced in the ordinary way and if the conclusion come to is that it confers the estate out and out with no reservation the right of alienation will be included just as much as any of the other incidents of ownership, and just as much where the gift is to a female as where it is to a male.

A sonless Hindu gifted his property to his wife in the following terms that "with a view to safeguard the aforesaid property, I, while in the enjoyment of sound health and unimpaired intellect, without reluctance and coercion, have specifically gifted the zamindari in the aforesaid villages with all the original and accreted rights, cultivated lands Seer, Saer, Jalkar, bankar and all the rights held by me to my wife, and I do hereby covenant and reduce to writing that the said lady shall, generation after generation, remain in possession and enjoyment of zamindari haqiat in the said villages on payment of the Government revenue. Now after the execution hereof, if I or any one of my heirs and co-sharers lays any sort of claim to the aforesaid property against the donee, the same shall be deemed false and untenable. With the exception of the lady donee, no one else shall have any power of interference and meddling with regard to the gifted property."

Held, that reading the deed as a whole it must be construed as conferring upon the wife an absolute, i.e., alienable and heritable estate in the property: 7 Cal. 304 (P.C.) and 24 Cal. 834 (P.C.), Ref.; A.I.R. 1928 Oudh 203, Affir. (Other case-law considered.) (Sir George Lowndes.) JAGMOHAN SINGH v. PANDIT SRI NATH. A.I.R. 1930 P.C. 253 (P.C.).

———Gift to daughter and after her death to her male heirs—Her heirs take independently and not through her—They take absolute estate—Heirs not living at the date of settlement would be excluded.

The settlement in relation to her provided: "As to one quarter of the said rents, dividends and profits upon trust to pay the same to my daughter Krishnabai during her life for her sole and separate use and after her death in trust for the male heirs of the said Krishnabai share and share alike." The settlor died and then Krishnabai died after him, leaving six sons, all of whom were living at the date of the settlement. The heirs of the settlor contended that the limitations in favour of her male heirs after her death were contrary to Hindu Law and void, and that in consequence there was a resulting trust in favour of the settlor,

Held, that the true interpretation of the settlement was that the persons who answer the description of male heirs at the date of Krishnabai's death were the persons in whose favour an independent gift was made, that the male heirs of Krishnabai did not take by inheritance from her but that by operation of the Hindu Law there would be excluded from that class people who were not living when ———Life-estate with powers of disposition can be created—Deed—Construction.

There is ample authority in this country as well as in England for holding that there may be a life-estate with powers of disposition.

Where the adoptive mother entered into an agreement which provided "I have, therefore, henceforward given all the property belonging to my husband as per the schedule below, to my adopted son S, the said S, shall therefore enjoy the said property with all the rights; the remaining property shall be enjoyed independently by myself alone and that the property which remains after being utilised by me during my life-time shall be enjoyed after my death by the said S."

Held, that the mother intended to reserve to herself a life-estate with full powers over the corpus during her life and as to whatever property was left the adopted son was to succeed. (English and Indian case-law discussed.) (Krishnan and Odgers, JJ.). VENKATA CHANDI KAMBA v. VENKATA RAO.

———"Donees, wives of the donor, to be responsible for loss or gain"—No power to alienate—Only limited estate conveyed.

Where a deed of gift stated that the donor had made a gift of the property with all its inherent and adventitious rights to his wives G and N in a certain proportion and that the donor had withdrawn his possession and had put the donees in possession, and the deed finally provided that the donees, while in possession and occupation of the gifted property, would be "responsible for loss or gain" and that neither he nor his heirs shall have any claim whatsoever with regard to the subject-matter of the gift and finally there was a declaration that the donees would have no right to alienate the property.

Held: that the wives took nothing more than the limited estate peculiar to Hindu females. (Lindsay and Sulaiman, JJ.). JAVITRI v. GENDAN SINGH.

———Gift for maintenance—As long as donees live reversioners not to claim—Limited estate is conveyed.

Where the sole surviving male member of a family, having dependent on him his brother's widow, a daughter's son and the widows of two predeceased sons of his own, executed a deed under which he made a grant of a share in one village to a daughter's son and shares in two other villages to his deceased brother's widow and then granted the shares in all the other villages together with a house to his sons' wives in the following words: "The rest of the shares and the house I have given to my sons' wives on this condition that the said widows should remain in possession of the properties given to them and should maintain themselves with the profit thereof.....My sons' wives and my younger brother's wife should remain in possession of their shares which I have given them for their whole life and on the death of one of the sons' wives the other shall get her share also. short, so long as the three Musammats are, or any of them is, alive, none of my reversioners shall have a claim to their shares, ———Will in favour of two persons—They take as tenants-in-common.

When a deed of gift or a Will is in favour of two persons without any definite specification of the extent of their shares, they take as tenants-in-common and not as joint owners.

The principle of joint tenancy is unknown to the Hindu Law except in connexion with the joint Hindu family: 33 All. 665; 26 Bom. 445 and 39 P. R. 1909, Rel. on. (Shadi Lal, C J. and Agha Haidar, J.). MT. JIO v. MT. RUKURAN.

Where the deed of gift does not specify the shares of the donees, and beyond stating that the land is gifted to the two donees who are members of the joint Hindu family, does not in any way lay down any conditions as to the future enjoyment of the property,

Held: that the gift does not create a joint tenancy so as to entitle one donee to succeed to the rights of the other by right of survivorship on the death of the latter. Case-law considered. (Jai Lal, J.). JOWALA RAM v. MT. CHANDAN.

———Gift to woman—Words indicating absolute estate are not affected by sex of the grantee.

Per Dawson-Miller, C. J.—There is nothing in the Hindu Law which prohibits a woman, whether wife or widow, from acquiring an absolute estate in property including the power of alienation. If words of grant are used importing the transfer of full proprietary rights, then effect must be given to them irrespective of the sex of the grantee. It may appear, however, from the context or from the surrounding circumstances that a limited power of disposal was intended to be conferred, even where an estate of inheritance is granted. Where ambiguity exists in the document itself, or where the words are not of sufficient amplitude to confer full powers of alienation, it is legitimate to assume that the grantor had in mind the ordinary disability which the Hindu Law attaches to a woman's rights over property, and this may be considered in determining the intention even where an estate of inheritance is granted. But where words are used which in their context express an intention of transferring full rights of ownership, the other principles of interpretation are of minor importance and should not be allowed to restrict the natural meaning of the words. HINDU LAW—Gift—Construction.

———Gift to be construed with due regard to Hindu notions and wishes.

Per Das, J.—In construing a deed of gift by a Hindu to his wife the Court is bound to proceed on the assumption that a Hindu knows that, as a general rule, women do not take absolute estates of inheritance which they are enabled to alienate. This does not mean that, where there are words of sufficient amplitude conveying in the terms of the gift itself the fullest rights of ownership, including the power to alienate, the Court will refuse to construe the deed of gift so as to deny to the donee the right to alienate. But that, in construing a deed of gift executed by a Hindu husband in favour of his wife, the Court would be right in leaning towards a construction, which is in consonance with the ordinary notions and wishes of the Hindus with respect to devolution of property and in harmony with the law by which the parties are governed.

The ordinary notions and wishes of Hindus are well known and have been recognised by the Judicial Committee.

Per Foster, J—The Courts should examine the documents of transfer with the eye to the ordinary Hindu's inclinations; he does not usually intend to make a wife absolute owner by a deed of transfer. In the earlier interpretations of this rule of the Privy Council the Courts went almost so far as to import a strong presumption that the grantee was to receive a limited estate, and it was held that something express is necessary to exclude what is tacitly implied, Expression facit cessare tacitum. But the rule adopted in modern times is that if by a construction of the document the grant of an absolute estate can reasonably be extracted, there is no need to insist on an express and distinct grant of an absolute estate, Expressio corum quae insunt nihil operatur. Express words are not essential: the fact that the donor is a Mithila wife is not fundamental; it is to be seen whether the words are of sufficient amplitude to convey an absolute estate: A.I.R 1922 P.C. 80, Foll. (Dawson-Miller, C.J. on difference between Das and Foster, JJ.). ———Where one of the legatee's wife was given an absolute estate, and the two daughters of the testator also were given estates which were antagonistic to the interest of his wife, the natural inference would be that the nature of the estate given to the wife was also the same. ———Gift to adopted son as such is invalid if the adoption is invalid in Law.

M adopted his illegitimate son R and then made a gift of certain properties to him. The gift deed ran thus:—With a view to perpetuate my line and to have an heir to look to the performance of the religious duties and also for the management of the property, I take you in adoption according to our religion and you have been given in adoption by your natural mother of her free will. So I take you in adoption according to Danpratingrah on Margashirsh Sud 2nd shake 1819. You are clothed with all the rights that my natural born son might have got. You should continue our line and lead a prosperous life. You asked me to pass a Malikpatra in your favour and so I have passed it. The property is given to the full ownership of Ramaswami,

HINDU LAW—Gift—Formalities.

Held: that the intention of the donor was to give the property to R as his adopted son capable of inheriting in the same way as a natural born son and that since the adoption was invalid the gift also failed and could not take effect. ———Credit entry in accounts in favour of granddaughter—Donor not rendering accounts—Donor manipulating accounts as she liked—No gift to granddaughter.

One B, an Agarwal Jain, credited certain sums in her account books in the name of her grand-daughter M, who was a minor, at the time of adopting a son to herself and that of son's marriage. The said sums were not deposited by M with B after M had received them from B. No accounts were rendered and no correspondence passed. Whenever B wanted, she manipulated the account and transferred amount as she pleased,

Held, that although among the Agarwal Jain community there was a practice on the occasion of adoptions and marriages to make money presents to relatives on a munificent scale still B did not make herself the bailee of M by an unequivocal act which may change the character of her own continuous possession. HINDU LAW—Gift—Law applicable.

———Acceptance is necessary—Acceptance of the deed of gift is prima facie evidence of the acceptance of the gift.

Under Hindu Law express acceptance is necessary for the completion of a gift even assuming that under Hindu Law acceptance of gift by the donee may be presumed.

Until he signifies his dissent, the Court must be satisfied that there was acceptance by the donee before it can give effect to a deed of gift relied upon by a party to the suit. Acceptance of a deed of gift is prima facie evidence of the acceptance of the gift but the donee's whole conduct concerning the acceptance has to be carefully scrutinised in order to determine the question whether there was an acceptance of the gift in fact. The two points ought to be very carefully considered by the Court whenever a question of acceptance is raised, viz., (1) whether the donee is in possession of the deed of gift and (2) whether he is in possession of the properties gifted. The mere fact, therefore, that money was deposited in the name of the wife does not justify a presumption that she was the beneficial owner of the money: A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 81, Rel. on. (Phillips and Odgers, JJ.). Where a gift by a husband to his wife was one for consideration and provided : "The said Musammat should have and hold possession of the gift properties and enjoy the produce thereof generation after generation, and I, the executant, and my heirs and representatives neither have nor shall have any demand or dispute with respect to the gift properties or the consideration thereof as against the said Musammat, her heirs and representatives. ———Gift by husband to wife by a deed of gift—Her power to transfer must be determined by construction placed upon it.

When a husband governed by the Mitakshara law makes a gift in favour of his wife, the property transferred by gift becomes her stridhan and she would ordinarily have the power to transfer it. Such stridhan would descend by intestate succession to her heirs and not to her husband's heirs. But there are peculiar restrictions to the widow's right to transfer landed property if the gift has been made in a particular fashion. Therefore, in order to ascertain whether the widow has not the right to transfer the property, one must look at the deed of gift and find whether full proprietary estate is conferred or not: 12 M. I. Held, the words "with sons, generation after generation" used in their context convey an estate of inheritance and the words zemindari rights and representatives (qaim moqaimian) indicated right of alienation.

Father made a gift in favour of his minor son. During the donee's lifetime the donor did or said nothing to suggest that the gift was fictitious. On the contrary, all his acts and statements tended to show that he intended to make a real gift. But when the minor donee died, it became convenient to the donor to ignore the gift and to claim that he remained all along owner of the estate and that the gift was meant only to enable the Court of Wards to take charge of the property. He also got a deed of relinquishment executed by the widow of the donee in his favour reciting that the gift in her husband's favour was fictitious.

———Impartible estate is alienable in the absence of a custom to the contrary.

The general rule is that an impartible Raj is alienable by will as well as inter vivos as the title to prevent alienation rests upon the present co-ownership of the person who wishes to retain it, but in the case of an impartible Raj, such present co-ownership does not exist, inasmuch as it is so connected with the right to partition that, where that right does not exist, present co-ownership falls with it. But this general rule might be displaced by proof of a family or local custom restricting alienation, the onus of proving such custom being cast upon the person who alleges it.

That there had been no instance of a will purporting to dispose of a particular impartible estate is no proof of a custom of inalienability in respect of that estate. (Lord Warrington.) SRI PRATAP CHANDRA v. RAJA JAGDISH CHANDRA.

———Impartible estate is alienable by will in absence of family custom or tenure otherwise.

The succession to an impartible estate which is ancestral property of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara is "designated by survivorship." But where the question is not one of succession, but the power of testamentary disposition over an impartible estate such estate is not inalienable by will or otherwise by virtue only of its impartibility, in the absence of proof of some special family custom or tenure attaching to the zemindari and having that effect. The reason why an impartible Raj has been held to be alienable in various cases is that in such an estate the co-parcenary which under the Mitakshara Law is created by birth does not exist and the reason for restraint upon alienation therefore ceases to exist in the case of an impartible estate. The principle of survivorship, which governs succession in ordinary joint family under the Mitakshara, has to be followed in the case of impartible estates only for a particular purpose, viz., to find out a successor; where one has not been appointed by will and it is only for the purpose of determining who is entitled to succeed, that the estate is to be treated as the property of the joint family. The same rule holds good even where according to family custom the members of the joint family not only got maintenance but education and marriage expenses also, so that there was actual enjoyment by the members of the family so far as was consistent with the impartibility of the estate and thus the jointness was not only notional but actual. For as there is no coparcenary in law, and the estate is to be treated as joint only for a particular purpose, the distinction is not material. (N. R. Chatterjea and Chotzner, JJ.). ———Custom as to inalienability—Proof of—Nature of evidence.

The fact that there is no evidence of a sale of any portion of the estate is in favour of the existence of custom of inalienability but this is not sufficient. The absence of evidence of an alienation without evidence of any facts which would make it probable that an alienation would have been made cannot be accepted as proof of a custom of inalienability. Also, evidence which is as consistent with there being a custom as with there being no custom at all is not evidence of a custom modifying or varying the general law.

Where the estate has remained intact for several centuries, the fact is no doubt to be borne in mind, but it also must be remembered that according to the law as understood prior to the decision in the case of Sartaj kuari in 1889, an impartible Raj had always been considered as inalienable. And if the Rajas were following what they believed to be the law, it was not the custom because custom is something in derogation of the law. Hence that fact by itself cannot he held to be sufficient proof (in the absence of custom) of inalienability.

In considering whether the evidence proves the custom of inalienability, Courts have to bear in mind that if there was any occasion when having regard to human nature, there was likelihood of alienation, and alienation was not effected, it would be evidence of inalienability.

The fact that the bulk of the estate has existed from ancient times and that it has not been split up and dissipated in the course of centuries is certainly in favour of inalienability by custom. But it is useless to refer to the state of affairs before the British Government was established, because at the time these Rajas were in the position of military chiefs, and Courts have no materials of that period for determining the question of custom. After British Administration was established and before Sartaj Koeri's case was decided in 1889, the law as laid down by the Courts was that an impartible estate was inalienable. But where a supposed custom has followed the ordinary law as laid down by the Courts, though it was wrongly assumed to be ordinary law, that supposed custom which did not modify the understood general law and which had, therefore not independently the force of law, cannot be recognised by Courts as a custom having the force of law, even after it is established that the supposed ordinary law which it was alleged to have followed was not the ordinary law: 43 I.C. 871, Foll. (*N.R. The fact that no instance is available of special provision having been made by any holder of the estate for the benefit of his wife or children, during a long course of years does not prove the custom of inalienability of the estate in a case where in the majority of cases the succession devolved upon the eldest son, or where there was no son, upon the brother, and it was only in the last case on the death of the last holder and under special circumstances that it devolved upon a somewhat distant agnate: 18 Mad. 287, Foll. (*N. An estate only becomes impartible by custom, and the custom has in each case to be proved. —Impartible Estate—Separation.

———Evidence of separation—Nature of.

A mere separation in food, mess or worship that is in the general status of the family or even a partition of partible property inter se would not destroy that national jointness which entitles a member of the junior branch to succeed to the impartible estate and that the presumption of jointness can be rebutted only by showing that there was an intention expressed or implied on behalf of the junior members of the family to give up their chance of succession to the impartible estate. Such intention can be implied both from circumstantial evidence and from the conduct of the parties. But the conclusion must be irresistable and the circumstances must point not to mere separation in general but separation relating to immovable property itself, that is to say, an abandonment of the right to succeed to it,

HINDU LAW—Impartible Estate—Separation.

———Mere separation in general status does not destroy notional jointness—Presumption of jointness can be rebutted by express or implied intention to give up chance of succession.

A mere separation in food, mess or worship. that is to say, in the general status of the family, or even a partition of the partible property inter se would not destroy that notional jointness which entitles a member of the junior branch to succeed to the impartible estate, and the presumption of jointness can be rebutted only by showing that there was an intention express or implied on behalf of the junior members of the family to give up their chance of succession to the impartible estate.

But in the case of impartible property where the estate cannot be divided and a separated junior member cannot get any share on a partition, ordinary facts, which would be some evidence of separation with regard to partible property, would not be sufficient. Separation of the general status of the family does not necessarily imply a clear intention to renounce or surrender the right to succeed in case succession opens. There must be such evidence, direct or circumstantial, as would show an intention express or implied to give up the right to succession. It is not correct to say that in the absence of direct and positive evidence showing a clear abandonment or renunciation of the right to succeed, mere circumstantial evidence and inferences deducible from conduct would be wholly insufficient to prove an expression of an intention to give up such right. Such intention can be implied both from circumstantial evidence and from the conduct of the parties. But the conclusion must be irresistible and the circumstances must point not to mere separation in general status but separation relating to the impartible property itself that is to say, an abandonment of the right to succeed to it.

In the case of a partible estate distant relationship would indeed leave but a very weak presumption of jointness. But if in the case of an impartible estate no occasion for such succession has so far arisen, the presumption of law cannot disappear. The burden still is on the party who alleges that the estate was the separate property of the last male holder. Mere separation of the place of worship does not imply any intention on the part of the junior members to give up their right of succession to the estate.

The mere existence of strained relations would not be tantamount to an abandonment by the junior branch of their right of succession. On the other hand, they might very well entertain the hope of ultimate succession and look forward to the day when the last holder who had no male children died leaving a widow whom they could supersede.

Separation or partition inter se among the members of the junior branch of their partible property is no evidence of the abandonment of their right of succession The junior members are entitled to deal with their partible property in any way they like, and their action cannot imply any intention on their part to give up their chance of succession ———Junior line succeeding under agreement—Rights of senior line not affected—By a unilateral act like giving notice, the holder cannot terminate joint status with regard to impartible property.

It is a well-settled proposition of law that the succession to an impartible estate is governed by the rule of survivorship if it is joint family property and by the rule of inheritance to separate property if it is separate property.

Where the result of the arrangement was practically to substitute the junior line for the senior line to succeed to the estate but there was no evidence of any further interference with the right of senior line,

Held, it did not affect the Jaghir being held as joint family property and the right of survivorship subsisting in the senior branch as well as in the junior branches. The possession of the second line being consistent with the joint family rights continuing, it cannot be treated as making the Jaghir the separate property of the 2nd line by adverse possession. The effect of that possession is no more than that of the arrangement itself. Where that line becomes extinct, a new position would arise and there is nothing to prevent the senior line from claiming the Jaghir by survivorship.

It is very doubtful if the owner of an impartible estate can get himself divided in status with reference to that estate by a mere unilateral declaration so as to destroy the joint family right of succession by survivorship to it which the members have.

HINDU LAW—Impartible Estate—Succession.

To show that an impartible estate has become the separate property of the holder it is not absolutely necessary to prove that there was some express division in which that property was involved or that the rights of others in it were abandoned. Each case has to be decided on its own facts.

If an impartible estate is the joint property of a family, the junior members have a right in it which, however unreal it may be for the purposes of actual enjoyment and preventing alienation, is still real and gives a chance of succession by survivorship.

The case of Satraj Kuari v. Deoraj Kuari, 10 All. 272 which has stood "too long to be now touched" and First Pittapur case 22 Mad. 383 must be confined to alienation and cases in 41 M. 778; 24 C.W.N. 226; 37 M.L.J. 188 and 24 C.W.N. 857 may be ignored. An impartible zamindari (1) may be the self-acquired property of a particular member and therefore his separate property as in the Sivagunga case or (2) might be renounced by a member of the family as in the Padamatur case so that he becomes completely separate from other members of the family quoad that property or (3) might be wholly allotted to a member in a family partition dealing with it and other properties of the family as in the case in Vadrevu Ranganayakamma v. Batti Ramaiya, 5 C.L.R. 439.

The holder of an impartible estate cannot, by giving a registered notice to the junior members that he intends to be divided in status as regards all the partible properties and impartible properties, put an end to the rights of junior members over the impartible estate. Such a notice destroys the undivided status only as to the partible properties, the principle being, one member cannot compel another member of the joint family to continue undivided when the latter wishes to divide and is willing to share the property.

A junior member may, while dividing himself as to partible properties, also separate himself even as to the impartible estate. (Krishnan and Ramesam, JJ.). ANNADANA JADAYA v. KONNAMMAL.

———In absence of special custom ordinary Hindu Law applies—If property is co-parcenary property, nearest co-parcener of senior line will succeed—If it is separate property, ordinary rule of nearness in blood applies though senior line will be preferred as between claimants of same degree.

In the case of impartible estates, in the absence of a special custom governing the succession to it, the rule of succession must be taken to be that of the ordinary Hindu Law by which the parties are governed with such modifications only as flow from the impartible character of the estate. The difference recognised in the Mitakshara between succession to ancestral or self-acquired property must arise with regard to succession to impartible estates also. To apply the rules of succession to impartible property one must treat it for a moment as ordinary partible property and see to whom it would pass as such. If it passes to a single individual he or she would be the person entitled to the zemindari. But if it passed to two or more as equally entitled to it further rules have to be applied to determine which one of them should be selected as the zamindar as only one person can be the zemindar at a time.

If the zamindari is property in which the right of survivorship subsists, it would pass like ordinary joint family property by the rule of survivorship, and when there are more persons than one coming within that rule it will pass to the nearest co-parcener of the senior line and not to the co-parcener nearest in blood to the propositus. If on the other hand the zemindari is taken to be the separate property of the last zemindar the Mitakshara rule of succession to separate or self acquired property will apply and on the death of the last zemindar his mother will succeed if there are no nearer heirs and on her death it must pass to this zemindar's nearest reversioners under the rule that the nearest in blood excludes the more remote. But whereas both claimants fall in the category of nearest in blood, a further rule has to be applied to choose between them. In a case of collateral succession though the rule of seniority of line is not applicable in the first instance but the ordinary Mitakshara rule of nearness in blood applies, the former rule applies for the choice of one from among those equal in degree. ———Estate may be separate or joint family—If latter, succession is by survivorship.

The fact that a raj is impartible does not make it separate or self-acquired property; a raj, though impartible, may in fact be self-acquired or it may be family property of a joint undivided family; if it is the latter, succession will be regulated according to the rule which obtains in an undivided joint family, so far as the selection of the person entitled to succeed is concerned, i. e., the person will be designated by survivorship, although then according to the custom of impartibility, he will hold the raj without the others sharing it. ———Partition proved—Succession is as between divided members.

A general partition between the Zemindar and the other members of hisjoint family putting an end to their co-parcenary must be held to put an end to their interests if any in the impartible estate also. When that fact is found and it is decided that when the succession opened there was no co-parcenary between the last holder and the person who claims to be his successor, the ratio of the rule of succession by survivorship is gone and succession must then be traced as between divided members. ———No new cause of action, nor new starting point for limitation.

HINDU LAW — Joint family — Alienation — Validity of.

A son born in a joint Hindu family acquires by birth interest in ancestral property but does not acquire any interest in any right to sue. The cause of action accrues after an alienation when the purchaser takes possession (see Art. 126, Limitation Act), and a new cause of action does not accrue upon the subsequent birth of a son in the family.

The after-born son does not acquire a fresh cause of action and a fresh period of limitation does not start from the date of his birth. In his case the time from which the period of limitation is to be reckoned is the date of the transfer and when he was not born on that date and was under no disability he cannot obtain the benefit of the provisions of S. 6 of the Limitation Act. He can take advantage of any cause of action existing at his birth and sue within the period of limitation but cannot start a fresh period at his birth: 8 W.R. 285; 4 All. 120, Foll.; 24 O.C. 330; 1 Lah. 558, Ref. to. (Dalal, J.). Although it cannot be disputed that a subsequently born Hindu son has a right to avoid an alienation which took place at a time when other members of the family, not parties to the deed, were alive, it does not follow that he has a fresh start for the purpose of limitation from the time of his birth. When an alienation is made which is not justified by necessity a cause of action arises in favour of the other members to have it set aside and to recover possession from the alienee but there is only one cause of action in favour of the other members of the family. Successive causes of action cannot arise as new members are born year after year: 33 All. 654; 19 A.L.J.R. 978, Dist. (Sulaiman and Kanhaiya Lal, JJ.). There is nothing in Hindu Law which states that the properties to be called joint family properties should be immovable properties or that there should be any minimum value which is required to constitute a joint family. Nor is there anything in Hindu Law which says that possession of property is necessary requisite for the constitution of a joint family.. ———No presumption as to possession of property— Onus is on the person alleging its existence.

While there is a presumption that a Hindu family is joint until the contrary is proved, there is no presumption that a Hindu family is possessed of property. The party alleging that the property held by an individual member of a joint family is family property, must show that the family was possessed of some property with the aid of which the property in question could have been acquired. If this is shown, and only then, the onus shifts to the party alleging self-acquisition to affirmatively make out that the property was acquired without any aid from the family estate : A.I.R. 1927 Mad. 38, Foll.; 33 All. 677 ; A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 262 ; A.I.R. 1929 P. ———Burden of proof as to property being joint depends upon circumstances.

The onus of proof in a case where the property is said to be the joint property of a joint family must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case. Where the family was joint in mess and estate at the time of the acquisition and there was a nucleus of joint fund, however small it may be, the onus is undoubtedly upon a member of the family to prove that the property, though purchased in his name, was not a joint property. But the only fact that two brothers lived together alone does not throw any burden of proof on the plaintiff more than is to be borne by him as plaintiff in a case to prove that the property was purchased by ———Brothers may make property joint without nucleus—It is a question of their intention.

Where property is acquired in the course of a business carried on by members of a Hindu family by their joint labour, the property so acquired may become joint family property, notwithstanding the fact that it was acquired without the aid of ancestral nucleus. In such cases it is a question of proof whether they intended to acquire the property as partners or as members of a joint family.

Two brothers carried on a joint trade for 25 years and during the whole of that period they had a common mess, they lived with their mother under the same roof and conducted themselves in every particular as members of a co-parcenary. From the funds of the joint trade they acquired immovable properties, obtaining sale-deeds indifferently in the name of one or the other and later on they executed deed of partition as between themselves:

Held, that the brothers must be deemed to have traded jointly and acquired the property not as partners but as members of a co-parcenary: A.I.R. 1926 Bom. 408, Ref. (Venkatasubba Rao, J.). VASUDEVA RAO v. SAKARAM RAO. 108 I.C. 301= 27 M.L.W. 750=A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 412= 54 M.L.J. 239.

whether it has arisen without any nucleus of descended property. If a single individual acquires a fortune by his own exertions, without any assistance from the ancestral property his issue would certainly take no interest in it. If several brothers did the same, the property would, in the absence of any indication of any intention to the contrary, be owned by them as joint family property, and in that case their male issue would acquire a right in it by birth, for under Mitakshara system there can be no joint family property in respect of which the male issue of the joint owners do not take a share by birth. If there is satisfactory evidence of an intention to treat the property not as joint family property but as joint property only, i.e., as the joint self-acquisition of the acquirers, it will be given effect to. Joint family property can come into existence without a pre-existing nucleus: 32 Bom. 479, Foll.

Where three brothers are joint at the time of a purchase there is no presumption that they are each possessed of separate property and that each contributes from his separate property to make up the purchase money. On the other hand, the inference from the facts, that the brothers are joint, that there are no other co-sharers and that the brothers, after the purchase, own the property in equal shares, is that the purchase is made with joint funds. When it is found that the family nucleus is of such a character that it could not have yielded any appreciable income and when there is no proportion between the family nucleus and the fortune acquired in the course of a few years, the matter does not rest with mere presumptions alone. One Rajaram's share was decreed in a partition suit along with a considerable amount. Rajaram's minor son was a party to the partition suit. Rajaram for himself and his minor son, released the right to the sum, on his opponent Tuljaram agreeing not to prosecute the appeal against the partition decree. The appeal was therefore not prosecuted. The minor son of Rajaram on attaining majority filed a suit for recovering the sums, which was dismissed by both the Courts in India but the Privy Council, holding that the arrangement by Rajaram did not bind Rajaram's son remanded the case for ascertainment of son's share. Before the suit came on for trial Rajaram got two more sons who were added as co-defendants. The new born sons pleaded that the arrangement by Rajaram failed wholly,

Held, that what the agreement purported to do was to release the whole of the debts that were then owing to the joint family in consideration of Tuljaram not prosecuting his appeals and when the attempted arrangement failed so far as the infant was concerned, it failed, in the events that have happened, to convey any of the joint estate at all. The question how far the sons are bound by a decree against the father must be decided with reference to the particular facts of the case; if the father is manager and the question in issue is one which equally affects him and the other members of the family and if the suit is properly defended the adjudication will bind all the persons interested along with the father for the reason that in that case it must be presumed that the father represents the interests of all. If the sons are of full age and are aware of their litigation and take no steps to be brought on the record but acquiesce in the conduct of the litigation by the father, the case will be still stronger and they will be clearly bound by the decision, and the case is still stronger, where not only is the son of full age and aware of the litigation and takes no steps to be brought on the record and acquiesces in the litigation, but actually conducts the litigation of the father: 14 M.I.A. 367, Rel. on. (Ramesam, J.). ———Official Assignee is placed in father's position as regards his powers in respect of the joint family property.

When the estate of the insolvent vests in the Official Assignee, the right of the father to dispose of the son's interest in ancestral immovable estate for the payment of his debts vests in the Official Assignee. Upon general principles of the Hindu Law governing the rights of the father and his son in the co parcenary property an order of adjudication against the father has only the effect of replacing the father by the Official Receiver and the order does not by itself vest in the latter the interests of the son in the property. As the son's share is in certain cases liable for the debts of the father, the Official Receiver may be able to enforce that liability, provided that he takes appropriate proceedings for the purpose and satisfies the conditions which alone render the son's interest liable for the father's debts. The joint family property can be attached and sold in execution of a decree for money passed against the father, and the sale affects the interest of the son as well as that of the father, and in principle there is no real difference between an individual creditor realizing his debt from the co-parcenary property and an Official Assignee who represents the general body of the creditors seizing it for the satisfaction of their debts. Section 60, C.P.C., mentions inter alia the property over which or the profits of which the judgment-debtor "has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit". And this is exactly the phraseology which has been used in the Insolvency Act, and it would be most undesirable that the same expression used in two enactments dealing with the rights of the creditors should receive two different interpretations. The son has his remedy, but the proper mode of asserting such equities is by suit or other proceeding against the Official Assignee. For instance, if the sons of an insolvent alleged that certain of his debts had been incurred for immoral purposes and were not binding upon their interests in ancestral immovable estate, they might maintain these allegations in a suit against the Official Assignee: and, in effect, seek to have the property marshalled so as to apply the property other than such interests of theirs to the payment of such debts: 7 Bom. 438; 21 Bom. 205; 19 Mad. 74; 158 P.R. 1919; A.I.R. 1922 All. 79, Foll.; 49 I.C. 848; 5 O.L.J. 665, Dist.; 42 Cal. 225, Dist. (Shadi Lal, C.J., Chevis and Abdul Raoof, JJ.). There is no valid reason for drawing a distinction between the powers of a manager to sue on behalf of the joint Hindu family for a debt due to the family in his own name alone without impleading the other members and to sue for possession of immovable property belonging to the joint Hindu family without impleading the other co-parceners. At any rate, especially in the case of a father of a joint Hindu family, the consideration is even a stronger in favour of holding that he could sue both on behalf of himself and his minor sons without impleading the minor sons. The position will be different where co-parceners other than the father or the manager are suing, and, therefore, limitation runs even against a minor member of a joint Hindu family as regards adverse possession if his father who was joint with him was a major at the time that the adverse possession began: A. —Joint family—Manager—Contract.

———Specific performance of—When can be enforced against minor.

A contract entered into by a manager on behalf of the joint family at a time when one of the members was a minor cannot be enforced as against the minor. There is no reason to limit this rule to cases where the contract on behalf of the minor is a contract for the purchase of immovable property. Nor can it be said that the principle has no application to a case where there is a contract to sell for the purpose of necessity,

Held, however that a contract by the manager can be enforced except with reference to the share of the infant in the property contracted to be sold, unless the contract is of such an indivisible character that no specific performance can be ordered. The managing member of a joint Hindu family, who, for purposes not binding upon the other co-parceners and without their concurrence, agrees to convey a specific item of joint family property, cannot 'perform' his contract in its entirety and the case falls within the provisions of S. 15. The purchaser in such a case cannot enforce specific performance of the entire contract. There was no allegation that the brother had given his consent to A for carrying on the new business with P. The Court holding that A could not even if he entered the business as manager make other members partners with P, substituted only the son of A on the ground that trade debts of the father are binding on son,

In the absence of any objection by any member of the family, when joint family property is put up for sale in execution of a decree against a manager, it may be inferred that the intention was to pass the interest of all the members of the family in the property, though it may be open to the other members of the family to dispute that intention, and to satisfy the Court either that the alienation, was not binding on them or that the debt incurred by their father was not binding on them, or on any other ground that their interests in the family property had not passed to the auction-purchaser: 44 Cal. 524, Foll. (*Macleod, C. ———Suit by or against manager—No presumption that suit is representative.

If it is shown that the debt is incurred by the Karta of a family for the purposes of the family trade or for its benefit otherwise and he is sued as manager and a decree is substantially against the family in the name of its manager, all the members of the family will be liable for the decretal amount. These facts, however, must be proved by evidence. There is no presumption of law that a suit by or against a manager of a joint family is in his representative capacity as manager; and where the question itself is not raised as to his having represented the family, a Court will be acting rightly in holding that he sues or is sued in his own personal capacity. ———Manager to maintain accounts to show savings effected—Suppression of account-books—Manager will be charged with value of net income.

The Karta of a joint Mitakshara Hindu family is not accountable for the rents, issues and profits which came into his hands during his management of the properties as Karta. But he is still bound to keep true and correct accounts and to show the savings effected from the income of the joint family properties.

Where the Karta of the joint family properties has suppressed his books of account with the result that it is impossible to discover what are the savings effected from the income of the joint family properties, the only possible way, to discover those savings is to see what was the income of the joint family properties and what expenses were incurred by the joint family year by year. The Karta must be charged with the utmost value of the whole net produce deducting therefrom what is proved by him to have been spent for the joint family. Such an enquiry is always directed against trustees and agents who do not keep true and faithful accounts. Lipton v. White, (1808) 15 Ves. 432 and Gray v. Haig, (1854) 20 Beav. 219, Ref.

The rule is founded on the principle that every presumption consistent with established facts ought to be made against a trustee or an agent who, by his tortious acts has made it impossible for the plaintiff to discover his property. Although a Karta of a joint Mitakshara Hindu family is neither a trustee nor an agent in the strict sense of those terms; but as it is his duty to conserve the joint family properties and to disclose those properties to the members of the joint family at the time of partition the rule stated above is applicable in his case. This method of investigation is hardly a satisfactory one, and may even lead to injustice so far as the Karta is concerned; but the Court deals severely with any irregularities on the part of the agent and it strictly requires that he, who is the person trusted, shall act in all matters, relating to such agency for the benefit of his principal, and it is imperative upon him to preserve correct accounts of all his dealings and transactions in that respect and the loss and still more the destruction of such evidence by the agent, falls most heavily on himself.

Where the joint family has a money lending business, but where having regard to the attitude taken up by the Karta it is impossible to determine what the value of that business is, the only reasonable way of dealing with this matter would be to assume that the Karta of the joint family must have invested the net income derivable from the properties less the expenditure in each year, in the money lending business and to charge him with interest at such a rate as in the opinion of the Court fairly represents the profits usually made by the employment of money in such a business. Burdick v. Garrick, (1870) 5 Ch. 233, *Ref. by a promissory note or bill of exchange signed by the Karta for family purposes if the name of each member of the joint family to be charged appears on the instrument itself and is disclosed in such a way that on any fair interpretation of the document his name is the real name of the person liable upon the bill : 46 Cal. 663; A.I.R. 1925 Cal. 1062 and 30 Mad. 88, Foll.; 23 Mad. 597 and A.I.R. 1922 All. 116, Diss. from; 11 C.W.N. 139, Dist.

A debt contracted under a promissory note signed by a karta for family purposes does not attract the Hindu doctrine of family responsibility for family debts, and such a doctrine is incompatible with the object and effect of the law relating to negotiable instruments.

If a person has lent money to the karta of a joint family for family purposes upon the security of a promissory note, he is entitled to recover the full amount due under the promissory note, irrespective of whether the money was or was not borrowed or applied for family purposes but if he elects to pursue this course, he is restricted to the remedy that he possesses against the party to the promissory note, and must follow the special procedure provided in respect of negotiable instruments. On the other hand in a suit aptly framed he may claim in the alternative the amount of the original debt for which the promissory note was given as security, and may proceed under the Hindu Law against the property of the joint family as a whole; but if he chooses to adopt the alternative the coparceners will be entitled to raise the defence that the debt was not contracted or the proceeds of the loan applied for family purposes. In short the plaintiff in such a case may enforce the rights that he possesses either under the law relating to negotiable instruments or under the Hindu Law: but whichever remedy he pursues he is bound by the rules of the Code that he invokes. Where a promissory note is signed by the karta alone of a joint Hindu family he cannot be said to have signed on behalf of the other members of the family if their names do not appear in the pro-note. ——Averting loss in family business—Mortgage therefor is binding—Test of justification.

The criterion to be applied to a transaction such as a mortgage by a manager is not whether it ultimately turned out to be for the benefit of the family, but whether it was a transaction which at the time it was entered into was such that a prudent man would have entered into it in the expectation that it would be for the benefit of the joint Hindu family.

Where a mortgage deed was proved to have been executed by adult members of a joint Hindu family on their own behalf and as guardians of minor members, and where the minors challenged the mortgage on the ground that it was not for legal necessity or for the benefit of the family estate and where it was proved that the consideration of the mortgage was borrowed for purchasing a house in which the joint family had been carrying on jajmani business and it was established by evidence that if the adult members had failed to purchase the house which was offered to them at a concession, there would have been a loss to the family in the jajmani business,

Held, that as the danger to be averted was the loss of the possession of the house which had been in the possession of the family for 40 years, and which had been of material assistance to the family in conducting its business of jajmani, the adult members were justified in executing the mortgage in question and that the transaction was a transaction for the benefit of the family: 6 M.I.A. 393, Foll. and A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 50, Ref. (Mukerji and Bennet, JJ.). ——Transaction by manager can be maintained either on the ground of necessity or of benefit.

A transaction by a manager of a joint Hindu family can be maintained on two grounds, either: (1) that of necessity or (2) that of benefit. If the transaction is beneficial to the family, to establish that there existed a pressure on the family estate and that there was need for the transaction is unnecessary.

Where the family is in danger of losing the entire property and the manager pays off the mortgage by executing another mortgage, his action is justifiable on the ground of legal necessity: 6 M. I. ——Karta—Position of, in the joint family—Bona fide partition by manager is binding unless other members are prejudiced.

In a Hindu family the karta occupies a position superior to that of the other members in so far as he manages the family property or business or looks after the family interests on behalf of the other members. In fact he exercises a complete authority over the family affairs, as the common interests requiring protection, so long as full and absolute confidence is reposed in him by the other members and no separation is effected, but that authority does not include authority to transfer or alienate the family property except for family purposes. A partition of the family property between his branch and the other branches of the family is not an alienation and if he acts in good faith and in the interest of the family to which he belongs or of which he is the manager that partition is binding on the adult members of the family, and particularly on those who are absent on employment elsewhere or are minors unless there is anything to show that they were prejudiced by it. A decree for foreclosure obtained against the manager of a joint family alone on the basis of a mortgage executed by him for legal necessity is binding upon other members of the family who have not been impleaded in the suit. If a Hindu father can effectively represent his sons there is no reason why a brother or an uncle who happens to be the manager of the family should not similarly be able to effectively represent his younger brothers and nephews in the suit brought against him to enforce a mortgage executed for family necessity. The real point which has to be borne in mind in such cases is whether the deed was not executed for legal necessity. If such be the case it affects the entire family property and if a suit is brought on the basis of that deed against the manager alone the decree passed in such a suit is binding on all the members of the family. ———Decree in a representative suit by manager is binding on the minors as well as those who are not then born unless fraud or collusion is proved—Carelessness on manager's part, does not make decree the less binding on the other members.

A manager of a joint Hindu family represents the family and, therefore, all its members, as against a third party. When he institutes a suit as manager in the interests of the family against a stranger all the members must be deemed to be represented in it through him. The result of the suit binds not only the manager but all the members of the family unless, of course, any fraud or collusion were established which would vitiate the decree. The mere ground that in the opinion of the minor sons their fathers did not look after the case sufficiently well, or that they were careless or negligent in the conduct of their case, would not be a good ground for ignoring the effect of the decree. The question of carelessness or negligence may arise in cases where a suit is instituted by a guardian on behalf of his ward and the question of a case being properly and fairly fought out may also arise when a limited owner, like a Hindu widow, is representing the estate for the time being. But these considerations cannot arise when the manager of a family, not as a mere reversioner, but as proprietor in whom the interest actually vests, institutes a suit and instead of impleading all the members of the family sues on their behalf as manager. A decree obtained under such circumstances is binding not only on all the members of the family who are then alive but also on those who are born subsequently: 34 All. 572 (F.B.), Foll.; A.I.R. 1922 All. 342, Dist. (Sulaiman, J.). ———Until partition joint property is one unit—Manager represents the family in suits.

There is not only unity of title but unity of possession and enjoymeut with all the incidents of the right of survivorship attached to it; therefore in suits the manager is deemed to represent a joint family. ———Manager's name alone recorded in revenue papers—Manager represents junior members also.

It is a common, though not an invariable, practice, in the case of a zemindari owned by a joint family for the name of manager alone to be recorded in the revenue papers. In such cases the manager is recorded in a representative capacity, and it is really the joint family which is the recorded co-sharer. Therefore an order passed under S. 111 (1) (b) of the U.P. —Joint family—Presumption—Absence of.

———Presumption of jointness ceases when one branch has separated—Entries in revenue papers are not much helpful in determining status—In large family the presumption grows weaker as the relationship becomes more distant.

A family is presumed to be joint until the contrary is established, but no such presumption arises where it is established that before the suit one or more members of the family had separated. A member of a joint family can separate himself from the other members of the joint family, and would on such separation be entitled to have a share in the property of the joint family ascertained and partitioned off for him, but the remaining co-parcener, without any special agreement between themselves may continue to be co-parceners and to enjoy as members of a joint family what may remain after such a partition of the joint family property is made or live separately from each other. But where one branch of the family was separate, the ordinary presumption that the remaining branches of the family had continued joint ceases to apply. The definition of shares in revenue papers by itself affords very slight indication of a separation in a Hindu family. Such entries are usually made in the Revenue records by those responsible for their preparation to make the record definite and precise. The acquisition of some property in the name of one member of the family and of another property in the name of another member, would similarly be inconclusive, but where there is a long series of dealings by different members of the family independently of each other, the same consideration would not be applicable.

———Father and sons must be held joint unless proved to the contrary.

The presumption under Hindu Law is that a father and son are joint and unless it is proved that they are separated it must be held that they are still joint.

Plaintiff's father B, a Hindu, came to Burma and resided there for some 32 years before his death and acquired some property. Defendant, B's son by the second wife, lived with his father in Burma. Plaintiff sued defendant for partition of his father's estate. Plaintiff's case was that he, his father and defendant formed a joint family and on his father's death he was entitled to one-half share of the estate. Defendant denied that plaintiff was a member of the joint family and contended that the fact that the deceased lived in Burma with defendant, whilst plaintiff lived in India and had apparently nothing to do with the deceased and defendant, except for a single meeting with his father, for 15 years, was incompatible with their being members of a joint family, Held, (Das and Carr, JJ.), that the plaintiff was entitled to partition as it was not proved that the father and son ever separated or that there was partition between the father and son. The mere fact that the son lived in India and that the father came away to, and stayed in Burma, did not prove the partition or separation between the father and son: 32 Mad. 377, Rel. on.

Pratt, J.—The fact that the deceased brought his sons by one wife to Burma, and he did not bring plaintiff the son by his other wife, and plaintiff did not at majority or at any time join his father in Burma, justifies the presumption that plaintiff was separate and was not a member of a joint family with his father after the latter came to Burma. In a joint Hindu family, the presumption is until the contrary is proved, that the family continues joint. That presumption is peculiarly strong in the case of the sons of one father and gets weaker as the branches multiply.

A definition of shares in revenue and village papers affords, by itself, but a very slight indication of an actual separation in a Hindu family, and certainly in no case it can be regarded, standing alone, as sufficient evidence upon which to find, contrary to the presumption in law as to jointness, that the family to which such a definition referred had separated: A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 132, Foll. (Kanhaiya Lal and Ashworth, JJ.). A suit instituted by a member of a joint Hindu family for partition of the family property was dismissed by the Court on the ground that all the family properties had not been brought into the hotchpot. There was no subsequent division of the property by metes and bounds,

Held, that the presumption of jointness attached to all the properties, and unless it was established that any particular item was acquired with separate funds by any individual member, all the properties in the hands of the members were liable to be divided. ———Every Hindu family is presumed to be joint unless division is proved.

In the case of Hindu joint family the presumption is, in the absence of the proof of division, that the family was joint in food, worship and estate, but the presumption is not applicable after there has been a separation in the sense of disruption such as would put an end to a joint family.

In the absence of evidence as to nucleus, the property may readily be presumed as joint from the subsequent conduct of the parties.

The defendants in a suit by the widow to recover possession of specified share of her husband on the ground of separateness, start with a certain presumption in their favour; but the presumption is not a very strong one where the relationship is not a very near one. The widow is not bound to prove that a formal separation, accompanied by an apportionment of such goods or properties as it was desired to divide immediately and an ascertainment of shares in respect of other landed properties, took place in any formal manner or at any specified date. The plaintiff can succeed if she can produce evidence to satisfy the Court that the position of her husband and the defendants up to the time of the death of her husband was such that they could not have been living as members of a joint undivided family. It is by no means an unusual thing for members of a joint family, when acquiring landed property by purchase, to cause to be specified in their document of title the shares which they would respectively take upon a partition. Where this is not done the ordinary inference from the document, on the face of it, would be that the vendees are taking in equal shares, and the members of the family may well think it convenient that such a presumption, where it is not in accordance with the facts, should be rebutted by specification of shares; no clear inferences in favour of separation or the break up of the joint family can be drawn from a transaction of this sort. [A. I. HINDU LAW—Joint family—Self-acquisition—Gains of science.

——Gains of science—When are self-acquisition.

All acquisitions by members of a joint Hindu family are prima facie partible and the burden of proof lies on those who assert to the contrary. The gains of science are exempted from this rule only when the education which made such gains possible is affirmatively shown to have been acquired without detriment to the family estate: A.I.R. 1917 P.C. 105 and A.I.R. 1921 P.C. 35, Foll. (Harrison and Coldstream, JJ.). KANSHI RAM v. SHANKARDAS. 111 I.C. 596=10 L.L.J. 93=A.I.R. 1928 Lah. 397.

——Gains made by a member without the aid of joint family funds are self-acquired property.

The acquisition of distinct property by a member of an undivided Hindu family without the aid of joint funds is his self-acquired property, and is not subject to partition. 6 B. 225; 45 C. 666, Ref. Hindu law texts regarding gains of science establish it as a rule of Hindu Law that the ordinary gains of science are divisible, when such science has been imparted at the family expense, and acquired while receiving a family maintenance; but that it is otherwise when the science has been imparted at the expense of persons who are not members of the acquirer's family. Acquisition, made as a Government servant, which is kept quite separate from the joint family funds, is impartible and the acquirer could deal with it as he chose. ——Earnings without the help of joint family funds are self acquisitions.

No doubt when it is proved and admitted that a Hindu has lived in commensality and possessed joint property, if any member of the family claims any property as his separate, the burden lies upon him to prove that it was acquired in circumstances which would constitute it his separate property. But where the deceased was a member of a joint family and it was not shown that he acquired any education at the expense of the joint family or that any money was contributed out of the joint family funds to help him in any of his undertakings.

Every member of a joint family who is found to be in possession of a property at his death cannot necessarily be said to have acquired the property as a member of the joint family. (*Kennedy, J. ——Gains of science—When not self-acquisition.

In a joint Hindu family the rule is that the acquisitions of the members are joint property and partible and impartibility is the exception. One of the recognised exceptions is property acquired by the possession of special "science" or "learning". Where this is acquired outside the family and has to be paid for in one form or another at the expense of the family it is acquired "to the detriment of the family property". In that case it is a family investment, and the emoluments which its possessor is thus enabled to obtain, are joint property of the family as fruits of the investment thus made in the person of one of its more gifted members. But the individual can sever from the family at will on the footing of bringing his accumulations into hotchpot as part of the family property and without capitalising future earnings or being under future liability as to what he may make thereafter. So personal earnings and acquisitions may remain partible throughout the unseparated member's life, if he was originally equipped for the calling or career, in which the gains were made by a special training at the expense of the patrimony. (Case-law referred to).

A post in the Covenanted Civil Service of India is a post to which the rule would apply.

An Indian Civil Servant is not always what is commonly called a scientific man, but his is certainly a special and in many cases an eminently learned profession. The presumption, even in the case of such special gains, is that the acquisitions of all members are partible, until the contrary is proved. The personal and the family elements in the ultimate gains cannot be distinguished. There is equally little ground for contending that partibility depends on causa proxima or is negatived by the intervention of the personal element of the individual co-parcener's character. Changes with regard to gains of science have been in the direction of narrowing the category of partible gains. From maintenance out of the family funds during the period of education, the basis of partibility changed to the receipt of the education itself as the family expense, and then education generally was narrowed to specialised education, which is now the basis. No corresponding change, however, is to be traced upon the question, what is science, in the sense in which the text of the Mitakshara uses the term. On the contrary, while the principle has remained the same, the application of it has tended to widen, as changing times have brought up fresh instances of callings, to which special science and not the native wit of man is the means of entrance. ———One member holding property cannot be presumed to be joint family property unless nucleus is proved (per Venkatasubba Rao, J.).

It is not correct to say that, to start with, a presumption should be made that the family is possessed of joint property and therefore it cannot be presumed from the mere fact that a member of the family holds property that it is joint family property. Something more must be shown. The party alleging that the property held by an individual member is joint family property must show that the family was possessed of some property with the aid of which the property in question could have been acquired. If this is shown and only then, the onus shifts to the party alleging self-acquisition to affirmatively make out that the property was acquired without any aid from the family estate. ———Acquisition of property while family was joint —Person alleging that it was separate property must prove it.

Where it is proved that there is a joint family and where it is also proved that that joint family has some joint property, the presumption will arise that all property acquired while the family still remains joint is joint family property and that the onus of proving that any particular item of property alleged to be joint, is in fact separate property, will lie upon the person who asserts it to be so: 33 All. 677, Foll. (Lindsay and Kanhaiya Lal, JJ.). There can be no presumption that a joint family had a nucleus, nor that it had joint property. ———Benares School—Succession is by survivorship —Incidents of the law of survivorship.

The system of a joint family and the rules of succession governing that family is a peculiarity of the Hindu Law of the School of Benares. The rule of succession is known as one of survivorship, where no member has any definite or defined share and, therefore, cannot transmit it to his heirs, but a member who dies or somehow or other ceases to be a member of the family causes no change in the status of the family. The properties owned by the joint family continue to be owned by the surviving members thereof after the death or extinction of one member of it. If once the members of the family in the property belonging to it are ascertained and defined, the family ceases to be a joint family under the Mitakshara, in spite of there being no division by metes and bounds and in spite of the members continuing to live in commensality. ———Acts of manager are binding on minor members, if they are incidental to the family business such as money-lending or buying or selling immovable property—What are incidental acts.

Where a minor is a member of a joint Hindu family and as such entitled to a share in an ancestral trade, the manager of the family can, so long as it is beneficial to the minor, continue the trade on the minor's behalf. Minor members of the family are bound by the acts of the manager which are necessarily incident to and flowing out of the carrying out of such trade. An ancestral trade, like other Hindu property will descend upon the members of a Hindu undivided family and such family can by its managers enter into co-partnership with a stranger. The power of a manager to carry on a family trade necessarily implies a power to pledge the property and credit of the family for the ordinary purposes of that trade. Though such power of the manager for an infant heir to charge an estate not his, is under Hindu Law, a limited and qualified power; it can only be exercised rightly in a case of need, or for the benefit of the estate. Where a business like money-lending has to be carried on in the interests of the family as a whole, the managing members may properly be entrusted with the power of making contracts, giving receipts and compromising or discharging claims ordinarily incidental to the business. Without a general power of that sort, it would be impossible for the business to be carried on at all. Where the family trade is that of dealing in immovable properties it would undoubtedly be an act necessarily incidental to the carrying on of such trade to sell property which had been purchased for the purpose of sale. Even if the general business of a family be not that of dealing in property but lending money on mortgages and if in the course of such business the family had to purchase properties in satisfaction of their debts in order to avoid loss, it would again be an act incidental to the carrying on of such trade to sell such property and convert it into cash when a favourable opportunity offers itself to the manager: 1 B.H.C. Generally speaking, each case will have to be determined only with regard to its particular facts. ———Scale must be suited to widow's husband's position in life.

The test in determining maintenance allowance to a Hindu widow is whether the scale is suited to her husband's position in life. No doubt there may be circumstances in which the past mode of life of the widow may have been demonstrably on a penurious and miserly scale, or on the other hand, on a quite extravagant scale, having regard to the total income of the husband, but the general principle that can be applied is that the sum awarded must enable the lady to live as consistently with the position of a widow in something like the same degree of comfort and with the same reasonable luxury of life as she had in her husband's life time. No hard or fast rule can be laid down as to what particular fraction of income derivable from her husband's share in the family should be awarded as maintenance to the widow. All that can be stated is that in no event she can be allowed a rate of maintenance which would exceed the income from her husband's share of the family properties. Having due regard to that limit, the circumstances of each case have to be taken into consideration in fixing the rate of maintenance. The rate should be so fixed as to enable the widow to live comfortably according to the standard of living usually adopted by the members of the families occupying a social status similar to that of her husband. If the defendants want to plead that the plaintiff is disentitled to recover any arrears of maintenance they must plead and prove the circumstances amounting to an abandonment. But it does not follow that because they have not pleaded such facts the plaintiff is entitled to all the arrears she claims especially in a case where her husband died 26 years before suit and when it does not appear that any demand was made prior to three years before suit. In these circumstances a discretion remains with the Courts while not disallowing totally the arrears claimed by the plaintiff, to cut down the period for which arrears may be granted. ———Wife—Compelled to live separately—Husband and his heirs are liable for arrears of maintenance—Husband's obligation to maintain wife—Nature of.

The plaintiff was the wife of a Zamindar. The Zamindar fell under the influence of a concubine and once during his absence at another place, poison was found in the food meant for the wife. Thereupon the wife left the Zamindar's house to live with her parents. The Zamindar harassed her with false criminal complaints, which ended in failure. Afterwards the wife endeavoured to persuade her husband to take her back and allow her to live with him. But he always put her off saying that he would make some arrangement for her. Then after having lived away from him for nearly 23 years, the wife sued him for arrears of maintenance for 12 years (the maximum period allowed by the Limitation Act. Art. 128.)

Held, that the plaintiff was justified in living separately from her husband and that the delay in filing the suit for maintenance was due to her having been ever hopeful of being taken back by her husband one day.

Held, further that the death of her husband pending the suit did not deprive her of her rights to maintenance and that she could enforce the right against her husband's heirs at law.

Per Spencer, Offg. C.J.—The obligation of a husband to maintain his wife is one arising out of the status of marriage. It is a liability created by the Hindu Law. in respect of the jural relations of a Hindu family. When there is no contract between the parties to a marriage, as among Hindus, a suit for maintenance is not a suit based upon contract, but it is a suit arising out of a civil relation resembling that of a contract, which is specially provided for in Art. 128 of the Limitation Act.

Per Srinivasa Aiyangar, J.—The principle of Civil Law "actio personalis moritur cum persona" does not apply to the right of a Hindu wife against her husband for maintenance as there is no reason for extending the rule to an action which is based on an obligation arising out of the status. The true view of the Hindu Law would seem to be that the wives of co parceners are also members of the joint family, though they may not be entitled to share in the estate of the family, or to enforce any partition and as such members the obligation of the family, and of its estate to maintain them cannot be doubted. Though the Hindu Law imposes an obligation on the Hindu husband to support his wife, without any reference to any property or share possessed by him, even as it imposes similar obligations on sons to maintain their mother and father, yet when the joint family is possessed of property, a claim by a wife against her husband need not be regarded merely as a suit for enforcement of any personal obligation, but may well be regarded as a suit against the family itself, represented by her husband, through whom alone so long as he is alive she has to obtain the relief. On his death the true legal representatives in the action would be the surviving co-parceners of the family or the personal legal representatives of the deceased husband. The arrears of maintenance due and payable to a wife by her husband can also be held to be a debt within the meaning of Hindu Law; which has regard only to undischarged obligations and to which the distinction between debts and damages is foreign. HINDU LAW—Maintenance—Persons entitled to.

According to the Hindu Law, persons who by reason of certain circumstances are not entitled to a share in the estate, are entitled to maintenance by those to whom the estate passes by survivorship. The liability to maintain is on the co-parceners by virtue of the fact that they take the estate of their deceased relations. Under the Hindu Law even though the parties are not Sudras but belong to the higher classes, e.g., Vysias, they still have got rights to get maintenance though they may have no right of succession. When the parties are Sudras there is the limitation that where the father is a member of a joint and undivided family and the properties of the father pass by survivorship to other members of the family, the illegitimate children of Sudras, in case the father had no self-acquired property, would not succeed to his estate but have only rights of maintenance out of the property, and such a maintenance can be made a charge on the family property. If maintenance is given to an illegitimate daughter, it cannot be for her lifetime for she could not be in a better position than a legitimate daughter, but can only be given until she attains the age of 18 or is married earlier, and if she belongs to the caste of the dancing-girl, maintenance should continue till her marriage in case she were to marry or till she is able to earn her living according to the rules of her caste : (Case-law considered.) (Kumaraswami Sastri, J.). ———Avaruddha stree—Meaning of—Woman of alien faith is no Dasi or avaruddha—Not entitled to maintenance.

The literal translation of "avaruddh stree" is a "protected or confined woman." It really applies to a woman kept permanently by a person in his house as confined under his own protection in a manner so as to make it impossible for her to have connexion with a stranger. The English expression "continuously kept concubine" is the closest approach to the meaning of "avaruddh stree" and connotes an open residence and avowed connexion with the man. The woman in order to come within the definition of the term "avaruddh stree" must be a concubine living, under a man's immediate protection and control. The connection should not be secret, but the evidence must show that she lived with the man openly as a member of his family. Unless the woman is such as may be considered fit to work in a household she would not fall under the category of "woman kept in concubinage," or "permanent concubine." In order to fulfil this condition she must be a woman occupying a recognized status in the house and living in the family as a member thereof. Liability to maintenance in the case of such females exists only where the connexion was of a permanent nature, analogous to that of the female slaves who in former times were recognized members of a man's family. If a wife cannot be penalised by depriving her of her Srithanam for her refusal to live with a husband, who is suffering from a loathsome disease, it is equally impossible to conceive that the ancient law-givers intended that she should be allowed to starve for an act which no code of humanity or morality would condemn. Though it cannot be laid down that a person entitled to maintenance out of and residence in the family property has a vested and indefeasible lien on the family property merely by reason of the fact that she is entitled to such maintenance and residence yet she has a right and that right cannot be defeated by a trick. Where then the purchaser of family property knows that a person entitled to maintenance from and residence in family property is actually confined to that property for the purpose and where he knows that his purchase of such property will defeat that right of maintenance and residence then he is presumed to have purchased with such intention and the Courts will not permit his intention to be carried into effect. The standard of comfort must necessarily vary with the means of the family, due regard being also paid to the wants of the other members of the family who also have to be maintained out of the income of the family properties. Each case has to be decided upon its facts. The co-parceners of her deceased husband who have taken his properties by survivorship have no right to prescribe any arbitrary standard as regards the comforts the widow is entitled to have or the style in which she should live. In the Tanjore Raja's family there were unions by which women were admitted to the seraglio and were known as sword wives. ———Re-marriage not censured by the caste should be considered to be in the Brahma form.

When re-marriage is allowed by the custom of a caste, such a marriage may not have any disapprobation attaching to it. On the other hand even among castes which allow the validity of re-marriages such marriages may be regarded as not praiseworthy and of superior form but as blameworthy and of inferior form.

If a virgin widow has not passed out of her parents' family and is still under its control, and her parents or other legal guardians in pursuance of the caste custom which allows such marriage, give her away in marriage a second time as if she were a maiden, the marriage though a widow marriage, would undoubtedly be in the Brahma form if there is no social censure attaching to it. On the other hand, if a widow, who is not a virgin, herself enters into a matrimonial alliance in a form considered blameworthy by the caste, though recognized by custom as valid, and there is no gift of her by legal guardians it may be difficult to see any analogy between such a marriage and the Brahma form of marriage even though there be no consideration paid to her guardians. It may rather be an approach to the Gandharba form where the marriage takes place with the mutual desire of the parties. In this latter case, it would be of an inferior form, particularly when such a marriage is looked down upon by the caste people; but if such a marriage is not considered the least blameworthy, it would be deemed to be of the Brahma form. A woman was married when she was 10 years of age. After consummation of marriage at the age of 15 years she came to her husband's place but found him living in adultery with her elder sister from whom he had two children. She protested against this conduct of her husband, who subsequently executed an agreement in her favour covenanting to give up his illicit connexion, but he had not kept his agreement. ——— Principles to be followed—Legal cruelty in England and in India—Fear of bodily injury is not necessary—Cessation of marital relations is good cause—Personal violence to wife is not justified.

Courts in India have jurisdiction to entertain suits for restitution of conjugal rights and to grant relief when the parties are Hindus or Mahomedans' 28 C. 37, Ref. and they are enjoined to decide according to justice, equity and good conscience.

Cruelty in the legal sense need not necessarily be physical cruelty. A course of conduct which, if persisted in would undermine the health of the wife, is sufficient justification for refusing to the husband a decree for restitution of conjugal rights.

HINDU LAW — Marriage — Restitution of conjugal rights.

When a husband, who is guilty of a course of conduct which would be regarded as cruel to the wife, comes before a Court seeking its aid to compel his wife, to submit to his embraces; it is the duty of the Court to see whether the health of wife is likely to suffer by forcing her against her will to live with him.

In a case of restitution of conjugal rights by the husband the facts found were :—

1. The husband charged the wife with the attempted murder of her husband by poison.

2. He insulted her on more than one occasion and called her by the most vile epithet.

3. He treated her with loathing and disgust and abused her when she took some butter-milk to him, and he expressed his disgust by getting up from his unfinished meals.

4. He sent word through a servant that if she went back to him she would be dragged out by a Pariah and slippered.

5. He threatened her with violence by saying that he would lash her to pieces with a knife and allowed the second wife to abuse her and to say that she (meaning the 1st defendant) deserved to be made to stand in the road and be spat on by the passers-by, that it was enough that she had not wronged its (child's) neck and thrown it into the well and that if she touched the child again she would be beaten with broom-stick.

6. He used personal violence by pushing her by neck. The mother-in-law and the paternal aunt who treated her with kindness turned against her after the charge of an attempted murder was ventilated by the husband.

It was further found that the husband had no marital relations with his wife (1st defendant) for a period of more than 7 or 8 years,

Held, that these circumstances are sufficient to make out cruelty under English Law.

Held, further that it would be cruel now to force the wife to go back to her husband against her will.

No doubt, some times the Hindu Society overlooks personal violence to the wife by the husband, but when a Court's intervention is asked for, the Court should not be guided by the public opinion in a country village, but by what is just and equitable in the circumstances. It is also well known that among the Hindus a marriage once performed cannot be dissolved, for any reason whatever, and it would be repugnant to all notions and sentiments of Hindu society if the wife was given a freedom to repudiate her marriage as soon as she came of age or before consummation had taken place, merely on the ground that the marriage had been performed during her minority. He cannot delegate it to another person except by making a testamentary provision under certain conditions. He cannot, in his lifetime, assign it so as to substitute another person in his place. Indeed the power which the father possesses in this matter is in reality not a right strictly so called. It is a duty which he owns to the child and which, by the very nature of his relationship he is peculiarly fitted to perform to the benefit of the latter. ———Husband is entitled to the custody of his minor wife unless good cause is shown to the contrary.

Under Hindu Law the husband is the natural guardian of his minor wife, unless good cause be shown to the contrary. The fact that a girl is not mature would be a ground for the Court refusing to give the custody of his wife to a husband unless her parents were dead and the Court could be convinced that no attempt to enter into conjugal relations would be made before maturity; 23 W.R. 178 and 28 Cal. 37, Appr. (Macleod, C.J. and Coyajee, J.). HINDU LAW — Minority and guardianship — Mother.

—Minority and guardianship—Marriage.

———Minor is obliged to provide for marriage expenses of sister suitably to position of family.

By general principles of Hindu Law a minor is under an obligation to provide out of the family property the funds necessary for performing the marriage ceremonies of his sister in a manner suitable to the social position of the family and its pecuniary resources: 32 All. 325, Foll. Such provision is "necessary" and one which the minor is "legally bound" to make within S. 68.

Per Daniels, A.J.C.—Providing for the marriage of a sister is certainly not what is ordinarily understood by the phrase "supplying an infant with necessaries suited to his condition in life". (Daniels and Wazir Hasan, A.J.Cs.). JAI INDRA BAHADUR SINGH v. MT DILRAJ KUAR.

———Widow is competent to collect debts, even mortgage debts as a natural guardian of her minor son.

A widowed mother of a Hindu minor as his de facto and natural guardian has full power to collect debts. The mere fact that there is a lien on property for the debt cannot make any difference. ———Mother is guardian of minor son's person and property after father.

There is no support in Hindu Law for the proposition that a Hindu mother is not the legal guardian of the property of her minor son, after the father. On the contrary there is overwhelming authority in support of the proposition that under Hindu Law after the father the mother is the natural and legal guardian of her minor son's person and property, in a family where a minor son is the sole owner of the property and there are no other undivided co-parceners entitled to a share therein: A.I.R. 1922 Nag. 201, Not foll. and Dist.; 10 N.L.R. 133. ———Guardian cannot bind minor's estate with personal covenant to sell even for necessary purposes.

The Full Bench case in 42 Mad. 185 means that so far, and only in so far, as the contract by the guardian embodies the personal Hindu Law liability of the minor, it is enforceable against the minor and in so far as it goes beyond it, comes under the general rule that a guardian cannot bind his ward by a personal covenant.

Hindu Law does not compel a minor to discharge debts for necessary purposes by contracting to sell his property; it merely compels him to discharge the debts; it does not lay down the method in which he shall discharge or restrict him to any one method; it is not concerned with what method he adopts provided the debts are discharged and therefore a guardian of a Hindu minor cannot bind his award by a personal covenant for sale of the minor's estate though contracted for necessary purposes so that specific performance of the contract may be decreed against the minor: A.I.R. 1924 Mad. 863, Reversed; 42 Mad. 185 (F.B.), Expl.; 15 Cal. 8 (P.C.), Dist.; 18 Mad. 415, Diss. from; 39 Cal. 232 (P.C.), Rel. on. (Wallace and Thiruvenkatachariar, JJ.). ———Liability of minor for contracts by guardian explained.

Thiruvenkatachariar, J.—As regards the powers of a natural guardian of a minor to deal with the minor's estate and bind the minor by his contracts the following propositions are well established: (1) the guardian may in case of necessity sell or mortgage his ward's property to the extent of such necessity; (2) the guardian may also without charging the estate contract loans for necessary purposes which he could not otherwise meet; the term "necessary purposes" being understood as comprising all that is necessary to meet the wants of the minor and of other members of the family who have claims either against him personally or against his estate. The creditor in such cases cannot enforce the claim against the minor personally, but may enforce it against his properties; and (3) the guardian cannot enter into any covenants in the name of the ward so as to impose a personal liability upon him. In an ordinary suit for partition in the absence of fraud or other improper conduct, the only account the manager is liable to render is as to the existing state of the property divisible. ———Manager need only account for existing state of property—Subsequent to suit for partition, he must strictly account.

In an ordinary suit for partition, in the absence of fraud or other improper conduct, the only account the karta or manager is liable for, is as to the existing state of the property divisible, and the parties have no right to look back and claim relief against past inequality or enjoyment of the members or other matters. In the absence of any proof of fraud what the Court has to proceed upon is the assets of the family as they existed at the date of the suit; but subsequent to the date of the suit, the parties become only tenants-in common or co-sharers and therefore the karta is strictly bound to account for all receipts and expenses and can take credit only for such expenses as have been incurred for the benefit or necessity of the estate, and the net income after deduction of such expenses will have to be divided equally between him and the plaintiff: 43 Cal. 459, Rel. on. (Coutts-Trotter, C.J. and Sundaram Chetty, J. and afterwards Srinivasa Aiyangar, J.). ———Accounts to be submitted by the Manager is of the existing assets on the date of partition—Propriety of past transactions cannot be questioned.

All that a co-parcener seeking partition is entitled to is an account of the property which exists at the date of the partition or at the date when owing to demand for partition there had been a severance of status. The manager being the accounting party has to file an account as to the properties available for partition. But the other members of the family are not bound to accept the statement of the manager and it is the duty of the Court to try to discover what properties do really belong to the family. Any member also is at liberty to show that the expenditure which the manager says has been incurred has not been incurred or that savings have not been entered into account. But the account is merely an enquiry into the existing assets and that the head of the family cannot be called upon to defend the propriety of his past transactions except in case of fraud, misappropriation or gross reckless waste. HINDU LAW—Partition—Accounts—Manager.

———Manager's duty to account is only on the basis of what is available for partition.

In an ordinary suit for partition, in the absence of fraud or other improper conduct, the only account the Karta is liable, for, is as to the existing state of the property divisible; the parties have no right to look back and claim relief against past inequality of enjoyment of the members or other matters. ———Manager is liable to account for assets as they existed at time of partition.

A Hindu manager is not responsible for the manner in which he has disposed of the family income in the past, except in the case of a fraud or misappropriation, but when a partition is demanded he cannot evade his liability to give an account of the assets of the family as it existed at the time of partition. The parties are not bound to accept the statement of the Karta as to what the properties consist of, and the manager is the accountable party and the Court can order an account to be taken: 43 Cal. 459, Ref. (Phillips and Krishnan, JJ.). —Partition —Accounts—Agreement.

———Agreement to maintain separate accounts does not necessarily show agreement to debit amounts in partition.

The mere fact that a certain agreement was come to, that accounts should be opened in the name of each of the co-parceners in which the separate expenditure of each co-parcener, should be entered, does not show that it was also agreed that the amounts should be debited in partition, because it might well be that it was, thought advisable to keep the accounts in this way, just to show whether the enjoyment during the state of non-division was fair, as between the parties. (Wallis, C.J. and Hughes, J.). L. VARADA RAGHAVIAH v. L. VENKATA RAMAYYA. 61 I.C. 772= 13 M.L.W. 262=A.I.R. 1921 Mad. 542.

—Partition—Accounts—Excluded co-sharer.

———Excluded member is entitled to mesne profits.

There is no absolute rule that in a partition suit each and every claim for mesne profits is necessarily unsustainable. —Partition—Accounts—Manager.

———Manager is not accountable for rents and profits but is bound to keep proper accounts.

The manager of a joint Mitakshara Hindu family is not accountable for the rents, issues and profits, which came into his hands during his management of the properties as manager. But he is still bound to keep true and correct accounts and to share the savings effected from the income of the properties: A.I.R. 1921 Pat. 487, Rel. on. (Courtney-Terrell, C. J. and Kulwant Sahay, J.). JYOTIBATI v. LACHHMESHWAR. A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 260.

HINDU LAW—Partition—Accounts—Manager.

———Plaintiff can demand accounts to ascertain the amount of savings available for partition.

A member of a joint family, in asking for an account in a partition suit, cannot object to the various items of past expenditure by the karta, but he can call for an account for the purposes of ascertaining how much was saved each year out of the income so that it may be at the disposal of the joint family for partition. (Mullick, J.). SITA RAM v. HANUMAN PRASAD. 100 I.C. 632=8 P.L.T. 145=A.I.R. 1927 Pat. 413.

———Manager's liability to account—Capital monies traced into his hands must be accounted for.

A managing member is not bound to give a general account of his dealings and in the absence of fraud or misappropriation the managing member cannot be called upon to justify his past transactions : the manager is not bound to keep general accounts and co-parceners cannot complain if the manager in his discretion favours in his expenditure one of the co-parceners at the expense of the others. In this matter there is no difference between the position of an infant co-parcener and another. In respect of assets proved to have come into the hands of the manager, he has to account. It is not enough for him to say that he has no longer got those assets. Once it had been proved that the assets came into his hands, the co-parcener is not required to prove that they remained in his hands at the date of the partition. Capital monies proved to have come into the hands of a manager must be considered as available for partition in the absence of some evidence showing what has happened to them: 32 Mad. 271; 41 M.L.J. 503, Foll. (*Schwabe, C. ———Manager liable to account for profits subsequent to suit.

In a partition suit the plaintiff is not ordinarily entitled to claim an account of past profits but he is entitled to have an account taken of the profits of the properties subsequent to the date of suit. A member of a Hindu family suing for partition and for the profits of his share is really suing for an account of the profits received by the person in possession so that the proceeds received by the latter which are also divisible property, may be divided and his share therein also given to him. Such profits awarded to him is not awarded as mesne profits received by a person in wrongful possession but as appurtenant to the plaintiff's right in his share of the lands. —Partition—Accounts—Mesne profits.

———Manager cannot be called upon to render account for the suit period.

Mesne profits cannot be claimed by co-parceners for the period between filing a partition suit and the passing of decree therein ; the manager of a joint family is not obliged to keep accounts of the family property immediately the suit for partition is filed. Although there is a severance of interest from the date of the suit it does not follow that the family property does not remain joint till it is actually divided: 44 Bom. 179, Rel. on ; 15 N.L.R. 31, Ref. (Baker, J. C.). JANARDHAN v. WASUDEO. 79 I.C. 19=A.I.R. 1924 Nag. 315.

HINDU LAW—Partition—Accounts—Past transactions.

———Suit impeaching alienation by manager—Mesne profits before suit cannot be granted against alienee.

It is not usual to allow mesne profits before suit, in suits for partition against managers of joint families and unless it is shown that there was no necessity for the sale as a whole, the purchaser from the manager should not be made to account for the profits which the family might have received if they had retained possession of the property. (Schwabe, C. J.). MEENATCHI AYYAN v. RANGA CHARLU. 1922 M.W.N. 719=A.I.R. 1923 Mad. 120=16 M.L.W. 595.

———Mesne profits cannot be decreed in the absence of exclusion.

In a suit for partition between one brother and the auction-purchaser in execution of a decree against another brother, the auction purchaser will not get mesne profits unless it is shown that he was obstructed in taking possession of any part of the joint property. (Kotval, A.J.C.). RAM NATH v. SITARAM. 74 I.C. 81=19 N.L.R. 147=A.I.R. 1923 Nag. 288.

—Partition—Accounts—Mode of taking.

———Propriety of expenditure by manager cannot be questioned.

It is not open to any member of the family to assert that any particular item of expenditure incurred by the manager was improper. What can only be shown is that no such expenditure was in fact incurred. The propriety of the expenditure cannot be questioned by any member of the family. (Courtney-Terrell, C. J. and Kulwant Sahay, J.). JYOTIBATI v. LACHHMESHWAR. A.I R. 1930 Pat. 260.

———Account to be ordered is of assets and liabilities as on date of plaint.

An account in a partition suit is an account of the assets and liabilities of the joint family, as they existed on the date of the plaint. What has to be ascertained is what are really the assets of the joint family and if any of the co-parceners has attempted to misappropriate any of the joint family property by putting it in the name of third parties, or otherwise, it may still be followed and made available for division. But it is not the case that disproportionate expenditure by any co-parcener in the past is a matter, which can be taken into account, when a partition in being effected. (Wallis, C.J. and Hughes, J.). L. VARADA RAGHAVIAH v. L. VENKATA RAMAYYA. 61 I. C. 772=13 M.L.W. 262=A.I.R. 1921 Mad 542.

—Partition—Accounts—Nature of.

———Object is only discovery of property liable for partition.

The nature of account which a manager is liable to render is unlike that required of a trustee and the object of taking accounts is to discover what are the joint family properties liable to be partitioned : A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 1 ; A I.R. 1921 Pat. 487, Foll. (Courtney-Terrell, C.J. and Kulwant Sahay, J.). JYOTIBATI v. LACHHMESHWAR. A. I. R. 1930 Pat. 260.

—Partition—Accounts—Past transactions.

In a partition suit the Court will not, except in special circumstances, order an account to be taken of past transactions. Where it is impossible to predicate how much will ultimately be realized out of the outstanding debts, it is sufficient to give the plaintiff a declaration that he is entitled to his proportionate share of whatever may be recovered.

HINDU LAW—Partition — Accounts—Presumption.

Any property acquired by a member with his own money after the passing of the preliminary decree for partition would not be liable to partition, but when, it is shown that he possessed ancestral funds from which such property could be acquired, it lies on him to show that these funds were not employed for the purpose. If he fails to discharge this burden, it must be presumed, that the property was acquired with money belonging to the joint family, and it is, therefore, liable to partition. (Broadway and Brasher, JJ.). LACHHMAN DAS v. NANAK CHAND. 70 I. C. 810= 3 P.W.R. 1923=A.I.R. 1923 Lah. 20.

—Partition—Accounts—Presumption.

———Presumption is that Government demands regarding properties must have been paid and expenses on this account must therefore be deducted. (Courtney-Terrell, C. J. and Kulwant Sahay, J.). JYOTIBATI v. LACHHMESHWAR. A.I.R. 1930 Pat. 260.

—Partition—Agreement.

———By an unregistered deed of 1908 a father of joint Hindu family purported to make a division between himself and his minor sons. The minor sons brought a suit in 1912 for a declaration that they continued as members of an undivided family and that the partition deed was fraudulent and not binding on them. The suit, however, ended in a compromise decree in 1914 under the terms of which the properties were divided,

Held, that the suit, when instituted was a suit for declaration and therefore not a suit for partition at all,

Held, further: that the partition was effected by the compromise decree in 1914. (Coutts-Trotter, C. J. and Walsh, J.). DORAISWAMI NADAN v. NAGASAMI NAICKEN. 121 I.C. 863= A.I.R. 1929 Mad. 898.

In other words, the alienee will be decreed the possession of the specific property purchased by him, if that can be done, without substantial injustice to the other members and no co-parcener has a right to insist, in the absence of proof of such injustice, on his being given on division a share in the alienated item: 25 Mad. 690; 38 M. 684, Appl. (Schwabe, C.J. and Wallace, J.). The setting aside of such alienations can be made conditional on the refund to the alienees of such part of the consideration as is shown to have been advanced by them for necessary purposes, including in that term the discharge of the father's debts antecedent to the alienations in discharge of which the son's shares have been brought to sale by reason of their pious obligation to discharge their father's debts, and a similar equity would be recognized if it were shown that the purchase-money has been carried to the joint family assets, but the setting aside cannot be made conditional on the refund by the sons of the consideration for the alienations paid by the alienees to the father. ———Unambiguous declaration of intention—Filing of plaint, application for mutation, notice, reference to arbitration—Intention inferred from conduct—Renunciation of intention—No separation.

Partition is the severance of the status of a joint family, which may be effected by the exercise of individual volition indicating an intention to separate from the other members of the family.

The said intention must be manifested clearly and unambiguously.

The intention to separate may be established either by explicit declaration or from a uniform and consistent course of conduct of the party concerned or of other members of the family. The intention may be declared orally or in writing, and may manifest itself from the filing of a plaint for partition, from an application for mutation of names to the Tahsildar in specific shares with a view to separate enjoyment, from a written notice served upon the members of the family demanding a partition of the property, from an agreement executed by the various members of the family whereby the shares of the individual members are defined with the object of securing separate enjoyment of the profits, or from an agreement of reference to arbitration for the partition of the property. Instances like these may be enumerated but cannot be exhausted.

It is not necessary that there should be a consensus or agreement among the co-parceners for the severance of status of a joint family.

Where severance is effected by explicit declaration, the result is decisive, and the legal result cannot be affected or controlled by the subsequent conduct of the parties.

In the absence of an explicit declaration, an inference in support of the intention may be drawn from evidence of conduct which will necessarily be different according to the varying postures of each case.

Where there is evidence of intention to separate, this can only be annulled by clear evidence of the renunciation of such intention, and in some cases, by consensus or agreement on the part of the members of the family to re-unite.

Partition may also result from a definement or ascertainment of shares with a view to separate enjoyment of property.

The separation of one member of a co-parcenary is not necessarily a separation of the other members inter se: A.I.R. 1927 P.C. 224 and 1 I.A. 55, Dist.; 31 All. 412 (P.C.); A.I.R. 1925 P.C. 49; 26 A.L.J. 349; A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 201; 4 Cal. 434 and A.I.R. 1926 Mad. 388, Discussed. (Sen and Niamatullah, JJ.). A definite and unambiguous indication by one member of intention to separate himself and to enjoy his share in severalty may amount to separation. The intention to separate may be evinced in different ways, either by explicit declaration or by conduct. If it is an inference derivable from conduct, it will be for the Court to determine whether it was unequivocal and explicit : A.I.R. 1916 P.C. 104, Foll.

Therefore, mere conduct, as can be based upon evidence of the nature of separate arrangements for food, separate control of servants, the carrying on of separate business by a member does not collectively establish separation where there is no evidence upon which Court can rely to establish anything in the nature of a declared intention to separate : 4 M.I.A. 137 (P. C.) and 11 M. I. A. 75 (P. C.), Rel. on. (Stuart, C.J. and Wazir Hasan, J.). BISHUNATH KAUR v. SHEO BAHADUR SINGH. 104 I.C. 587= 4 O.W.N. 550= A.I.R. 1927 Oudh 265.

———Unequivocal intention to separate is enough—Partition by metes and bounds is not necessary.

Partition is a severance of joint status and as such it is a matter of individual volition. All that is necessary to constitute a partition is a definite and unequivocal indication of his intention by a member of a joint family to separate himself from the family and enjoy his share in severalty. Once a member of a joint family has clearly and unequivocally intimated to his co-sharers his desire to sever himself from the joint family, his right to obtain and possess his share is unimpeachable, whether or not the co-sharers agree to a separation and there is an immediate severance of the joint status. It is a mistake to suppose that there can be no partition until there is a division of the joint family property by metes and bounds : 11 M.I.A. 75, Foll. (Wazir Hasan and Raza, JJ.). BANSIDHAR v. MATA DIN. 98 I.C. 303= 3 O.W.N. 849.

———Notice of intention to separate to other co-parceners is not necessary.

For the severance of interest notice to other co-parceners of the intention to separate unequivocally expressed is not a condition precedent. The separation is an act of individual volition and does not depend for its effect on the consent or agreement of the other co-parceners. A separation may take place even in the absence of other co-parceners : 43 I.A. 151 ; A.I.R 1922 P.C. 201 ; A.I.R. 1922 P.C. 353, Ref.; 44 I.A. 358, Rel. on. (Wazir Hasan and Neave, JJ.). MT. An agreement between all the co-parceners is not essential to the disruption of the joint status; and separation, so far as the separating member is concerned, is a matter of individual volition. The intention to separate may be evinced in different ways either by explicit declaration or by conduct, and if it is an inference derivable therefrom, it will be for the Court to determine whether the conduct or declaration was unequivocal and explicit. Coupled with declarations or conduct, there must be a communication of intention to the other members ; then alone a division in status would result. A document therefore, which merely contains a declaration or affords evidence of conduct, does not of itself create a division in status. (Spencer and Venkatasubba Rao, JJ.). ———Clear declaration of intention will effect.

Unequivocal and manifest declaration of an intention to become divided in estate amounts to a valid separation and a disruption of the joint family: 8 W. ———Co-parcener claiming his share and reference to arbitration for partition—Severance effected.

It is settled law that in a joint Hindu family subject to the law of the Mitakshara, a severance of estate is effected by an unequivocal declaration on the part of one of the joint holders of his intention to hold his share separately, even though no actual division takes place ; and the commencement of a suit for partition has been held to be sufficient to effect a severance in interest even before decree. Where it was proved that the transferor claimed his half share of the ancestral property and that after discussion, all the joint holders signed the agreement for appointing the arbitrator to partition the property and agreeing to accept whatever partition he might make,

Held, the claim and agreement were quite sufficient to effect a severance in interest and to prevent the share of the transferor from passing by survivorship. In these circumstances the sale by vendor could not be set aside at the instance of the joint owners but only (if at all) at that of the vendor, or his representatives : 11 M. I. ———Definite intimation of intention to separate creates division.

Under the Law of Mitakshara an unambiguous and definite intimation of intention to separate has the effect of creating a division of interest and after notice to that effect no obligation rests on the joint family in respect of the son's marriage : Girja Bai v. Sadashiv Dhundiraj, A.I.R. 1916 P. ———Specification of shares in a Will is sufficient to constitute separation.

HINDU LAW—Partition—Declaration of intention.

The fact that the shares were specified in the Will was held to suffice to constitute a separation in law, an unequivocal declaration by a member of the co-parcenary body of his intention to be divided in status being sufficient to effect a severance without an agreement between all the co-parceners being required. (Broadway and Martineau, JJ.). JUMMA RAM v. MUNGAL RAI. 67 I. C. 812= A. I. R. 1922 Lah 473.

———Clear and unequivocal declaration of intention constitutes severance in status.

To constitute a severance in status, a declaration of intention by a member of a joint Hindu family must be absolutely unequivocal. It must be couched in such a language or the behaviour must be such that the Court can draw no other inference from the circumstance than that the party did desire to separate himself from one from whom it is now alleged that he did separate: 35 All. 81, Ref. to. (Napier and Odgers, JJ.). KRISHNASWAMI BATTAR v. SREENIVASA BATTAR. 76 I.C. 881= 30 M.L.T. 168= A.I.R. 1922 Mad. 341= 42 M.L.J. 124.

—Partition—Division in status.

———Separation—Division of interest necessary.

In order to constitute separation it is not necessary that there should be any partition of the property by metes and bounds. What is necessary to establish separation is that there must be a division of interests and not of the property itself: 11 M.I.A. 75, Foll. (Misra and Raza, JJ.). KHUSHWAQT RAI v. JAGANNATH PRASAD TANDAN. 119 I.C. 872= A.I.R. 1930 Oudh 184.

———Ascertainment of shares is presumptive proof of separation.

A mere ascertainment of shares of the members of a joint family is not conclusive evidence of separation, but there is a presumption that there was separation and the burden of proving that notwithstanding the ascertainment of shares of the various members of the family, the family continued to be joint family lies on the person making the assertion: A.I.R 1925 P.C. 49, Foll. (Ashworth and Iqbal Ahmad, JJ.). ———Physical division of property is not necessary.

Physical or de facto division is not essential to a separation. If the parties agree to hold the property in defined shares as separate owners, such an agreement, evidencing as it does an intention to separate (for intention is the decisive test), operates as an immediate partition; there is a division of title and interest, what is postponed being a division by metes and bounds: 11 M.I.A. 75 (P.C.), Foll. (Venkatasubba Rao, J.). BABU v. GOKULDOSS GOVARDHANDOS. 112 I.C. 184=28 M.L.W. 824= A.I.R. 1928 Mad. 1064=55 M.L.J. 132.

———Shares of members defined—Severance in status is effected—One member being minor is no bar to partition.

Partition or separation, which means the severance of the status of jointness, is a matter of "individual volition": A.I.R. 1916 P.C. 104, Foll.

HINDU LAW — Partition — Effect of — Joint business.

But when the members of an undivided family agree among themselves with regard to particular property, that it shall thenceforth be the subject of ownership, in certain defined shares, then the character of undivided property and joint enjoyment is taken away from the subject-matter so agreed to be dealt with; and in the estate each member has thenceforth a definite and certain share although the property itself has not been actually severed and divided. Such members may elect either to have a partition of their shares by metes and bounds, or to continue to live together and enjoy their property in common as before. Whether they do one or the other will affect the mode of enjoyment, but not the tenure of the property or their interest in it. Their interest is determined by the allotment to them of defined shares which converts them from joint holders into tenants-in-common. The fact that one member is a minor does not prevent a partition from taking place: 30 Cal. 738 (P.C.), Foll.; 11 M.I.A. 75 (P.C.); Foll. (Wazir Hasan and Gokaran Nath Misra, JJ.). MT. Held, a decree declaring certain alienation by father void, cannot reasonably be intended as a decree to put the plaintiff into physical possession of that which still remains one undivided half of the whole. Although, when it is established, that one brother has separated from two other brothers (the three forming members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law) there is a presumption that the two remaining brothers have separated inter se, there is no presumption that such a brother has separated from his own sons. In fact the presumption is the other way to the effect that such a brother with his descendants will form the members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara Law : A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 126, Foll. (Stuart, C.J. and Raza, J.). ———Separation between branches—No presumption of separation within the branches.

The fact of a separation having been effected between brothers, who constitute a joint Hindu family governed by the Mitakshara, raises no presumption that there was a separation within each branch or a separation of the joint family; constituted by one of the brothers and his descendants: A.I.R. 1924 P.C. 126, Foll. In the absence of any evidence to the contrary the presumption that the descendants of each branch remained joint amongst themselves continues.
